The Imperial Guard is being reorganized under the name of the Republican Guard.

Debate in the House of Lords on the Paris Convention Relating to Privateering.

LONDON, June 19.—The House of Lords to-day debated the Declaration of Paris of 1856 abolishing privateering.

Earl COWPER thought the refusal of the United States to agree to the declaration was no ground for its repudiation by Great Britain.

The Earl of MALMESBURY denounced the convention, and quoted the opinions pronounced against it by the late Earl of DERBY and Sir G. CORNWALL LEWIS. The refusal of the American Government to adhere to the agreement made it worthless. He sharply criticised the Frenchman for their disregard of private property and their outrageous requisitions during the late war.

Earl GRANVILLE declared that it was not within the power of England to repudiate a treaty which had been signed by all the Great Powers of Europe.

THE SOUTH.

An Ex-Rebel General on the Ku-Klux—What He Sees in Alabama—Alarming State of Affairs in Monroe, La.—The People Armed and Ready for Bloodshed.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Gen. JAMES V. CLARETON, of Alabama, was examined by the Congressional Ku-Klux Committee, to-day, for five hours. He testified he had lived in that State thirty-seven years and in Montgomery twenty-one years of that time; was a Union Whig before the late war and the Bell Presidential elector in 1860; he raised sixty-four companies for the Confederate army; he has been the only Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of that State since the war; he did not believe any secret Ku-Klux organization ever existed in Alabama; he had heard of outrages in a few localities by disguised bands, but Alabama was as peaceable and quiet as before the war. No more violations had occurred there since the war than in any of the northern states. The greater part of the crimes in Alabama had been committed by members of the Radical party. The Democratic party in that state were in favor of the education of the negro. He had advocated it five years ago in a speech in reply to Mr. WILSON of Massachusetts, and was already advertised to deliver a speech on the 19th of July next, at a State Educational Convention in favor of the education of the colored race. The only intimation he knew of at the last elections was by the Radical colored voters against those of their own color who wanted to vote the Democratic ticket. The cause of all the troubles was not the brave men who fought one another in the late war, but the politicians, sutlers and horse-holders who followed the two armies. The brave men of each army respected one another, and were willing to meet, forgive and forget. The leaders of the Radical Party in Alabama were, with but few exceptions, destitute of moral character—mere regular spoilsmen. Most of the negroes had behaved well. A generous policy on the part of the Government would best subserve the interests of both races in the South, and soonest restore the fraternal feeling and affection which once existed for the Union. The South loved our form of Government, but abhorred its mal-administration. He had always counselled submission to law and order, and believed it could and would be preserved in his State without any outside interference.

An official letter received at the Treasury Department from Monroe, La., dated June 12, says:

The prospect for corn and cotton in Louisiana is equally unfavorable. The condition of the ground has prevented the farmers from working. Weeds and grass have become deeply rooted and threaten the little corn standing. The general prospect is gloomy. Political agitation continues. The bitter feeling entertained by the largest portions of the whites toward the blacks and officers of the State Government, has become intensified in consequence of the recent election. At any time within the last ten days a conflict seemed unavoidable. Threats have been freely indulged. Both parties are well supplied with arms and appear eager for the conflict. Bands of armed men are reported to be ready, and only awaiting for the summons to begin the work of bloodshed. Lawyers, doctors, merchants, planters and mechanics attend to their business with revolvers ready within easy reach. Notwithstanding all this, I trust the crisis is passed, but should neither surprised if the difficulty culminated in bloodshed at any time.

Secretary Boutwell and the Alabama Republicans.

MOBILE, Ala., June 19.—Judge MCKINSTRY, President of the Republican Central Council, telegraphed to Secretary BOUTWELL to-day that the resolutions presented to him particularly denouncing Governor's appointment, are a forgery and never passed the Council. The Republicans of Mobile sustain SPENCER.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A Railroad Case Decided—The State Not to Receive Dividends from the North Carolina Railroad.

RALEIGH, N. C., June 19.—In the case of ANTHONY H. SWARMY vs. The North Carolina Railroad Company, and DAVID A. JENKINS, Public Treasurer of North Carolina, Judge BOND, of the Circuit Court of the United States, Fourth Circuit, and District of North Carolina, delivered this morning the following opinion:

"After considering this case, we are of the opinion that the act of 1849 creates a lien upon the stock in favor of bondholders, and upon dividends declared, or to be declared, upon the stock. We are also of opinion that no subsequent legislation of the State could constitutionally impair this lien. The officers of the Railroad Company should therefore be enjoined from paying over the said dividends to the State Treasurer, and a receiver should be appointed to take charge of the funds, and to hold the same subject to the order of the Court, as to the investment and distribution, and we name the following decree: The motion for a special injunction, and for the appointment of a receiver having been argued by counsel for complainants and defendants, and having been carefully considered by the Court, it is now, this 19th day of June, A. D. 1871, ordered and decreed that the North Carolina Railroad Company, its officers and directors, be restrained by the injunction from paying to the defendant, DAVID A. JENKINS, or to any person or persons who may, on behalf of the State of North Carolina, demand the same, any and all moneys accrued or to accrue as dividends upon the stock held by the State of North Carolina in the said North Carolina Railroad Company, and that the said DAVID A. JENKINS be restrained by an injunction from demanding or receiving the said dividends, accrued or to accrue upon the said stock or any part thereof; and it was further ordered that S. P. PHILLIPS, of the City of Raleigh, be and is hereby appointed receiver, to take and receive into his possession all moneys now or hereafter to be paid by the North Carolina Railroad Company as dividends upon the said stock, and especially monies heretofore ordered by the said Company to be paid on and after March 1, 1871, as a dividend upon the said stock; and it is further ordered that the said North Carolina Railroad Company, its officers and directors, be further restrained by an injunction from withholding payment of said dividends from said receiver, and from intermeddling with or obstructing said receiver in the discharge of his duties—the injunction to remain until further order of Court."

The bonds referred to in the above decision were issued by the State of North Carolina to aid in the construction of said road. SAMUEL PHILLIPS was appointed receiver on giving bonds for $200,000.

THE INDIANS.

Gen. Sherman on the Texas Savages—More Peaceful Raids Hoped for—Letter from Fort Sill—7,000 Savages on the War Path.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—A dispatch to the War Department from Gen. SHERMAN, at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, says:

"Gen. MCKENZIE reached Fort Sill June 4, and will take back to Richardson the Indian prisoners. By sending three more companies of the Tenth Cavalry to Fort Sill, Gen. GRIERSON will keep a cricket of three companies at old Camp Radzeminski and two at the mouth of the Canadian, and rest of the Texas force in reserve. Communication will be unprevented. I believe the Kiowas will give up the forty-one mules, and henceforth be more careful of their Texas raids."

GALVESTON, Texas, June 19.—The following is from the Weatherford Texas Times of June 10: "A messenger, just from Fort Sill, on his way to Austin, has put the following information at our disposal, every word of which can be relied upon:

FORT SILL, INDIAN TERRITORY, }
OFFICE KIOWA AGENCY, May 28. }

His Excellency A. J. Davis, Governor:

Since my arrival here I have been careful to collect information in reference to the movements of Indians on and off these reserves, and would state to your Excellency it is evident during the coming Summer that there will be witnessed the most extensive ravages of the frontiers of Texas of any preceding. Almost all the Indians of the agencies and also the Cheyennes of another have left and are now on the war-path. We learn from Indians that are coming in frequently that other bands of Comanches that do not belong here, are also acting, and that the plains are black with Apaches. Upon interrogation as to the numbers, they pointed to a large valley near by, of more than a thousand acres, and say that would not hold them. Constantly increasing depredations on the North-western frontiers corroborate their statements. The Apaches have been coming down the waters of the Colorado, and further south, and it is most likely the depredations committed at the far South were by them. We learn also there is a rendezvous west of the reservation, in what is called Sun Island, or Texas. There traders from New-Mexico meet the Indians and furnish them with arms and ammunition in exchange for horses and cattle. There are 3,440 braves and warriors, inclusive. Outals, the Chief of the Kiowas, is the bravest of all the tribes; Kickingbird, the second Chief of the Kiowas, is the second brave; Asahava, or Milky Way, is a distinguished brave, as are Tsesowe, or Silver Knife; Asatovel, or Grayish Fox; Ocelsewka, or Straight Fighter, and Cabava, or Running Bear. Gen. SHERMAN has these with the arrested Chiefs. Gen. SHERMAN, who is now here, has ordered additional forces along the northern line. The lists and enumerations of the Indians in the reservations of Fort Sill, are as follows: Comanches, 3,143; Kiowas, 1,826; Apaches, 800; Quahadoes, 1,000. Affiliated, Indians—Caddos, 484; Wichitas, 1299; Delawares, 71; Keechies, 126; Waches, 134; Towanacanes, 136; Howwominces, 85; total 7,264. In the Council held with TOTSUM just before the arrest, JOHN C. KICKINGBIRD is the second Chief of one of the warlike and powerful tribes of Kiowas, and a man, we are told, of many fine traits and considerable education. He spoke thus: 'I like the talk of yesterday, but can't say I will fully agree with all the parts of it. You often heard that the Kiowas are a bad people. I will tell you the reason. We are not permitted to buy arms and ammunition, and having had lands taken from us we are foolish enough to be bad. If you want us to be good, you must have Washington supply us with arms and ammunition, and then we will think of it. L. S. FRIENDS."

The following are extracts from an extra official letter from Fort Sill: In an interview between Gen. SHERMAN, Gen. MORRY, Gen. GRIERSON and the agent at the Tatum Reservation, it was shown as an indisputable fact that the Indians belonging to that reservation were hostile to and now on the war-path against the people of Texas. Gen. SHERMAN asserted that the Indians, having so frequently broken their treaty, should be declared outlaws, and the Government should cease to care for them, and sequestrate their lands and punish them as their enormities deserve, and that he should so recommend.

The Papal Jubilee at Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, June 19.—The Catholic demonstration to-night is an immense affair. The procession was an hour and twenty minutes passing a given point. In the line there were twenty-two bands of music, a large number of transparencies, mottoes, banners, &c., and nearly every man carried a Chinese lantern or torchlight. The illumination of Saturday night was repeated to-night, and there was an almost continual display of fireworks along the route of the procession. The streets, windows and balconies were literally packed with people to see the display. After the parade a mass-meeting was held in front of the Cathedral, at which the dignitaries of the Catholic Church and many prominent citizens made speeches denouncing the persecution of the Holy Father, and pledging him both sympathy and support. The enthusiasm was unbounded.

WASHINGTON.

Senator Cragin on the Results of the Late New-Hampshire Election—Improvement in Custom-House Returns—Personal.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Senator CRAGIN, of New-Hampshire, is in the city, and brings good news from that State. It appears that the Democrats are beaten on the only issue of importance bearing upon the next election in that State. The election to fill a vacancy in the Senate, caused by the death of a Democratic Senator, was so constructed by the circumstances and the State Constitution that a Republican was of necessity chosen—a fact which everybody knows. Of the two Republicans from whom the choice was to be made, the one least objectionable to the Democracy was selected. But he has pledged himself to act with his own party, thus making the Senate a tie. Senator CRAGIN has full confidence in his integrity, and there is no danger of his becoming another WINANS. Under these circumstances any legislation to redistrict the State in the interest of the Democracy, or to reorganize the Judiciary, is impossible. The organization of the Legislature, and the election of a Governor is of little consequence, if they fail in these two measures of prime importance, in carrying the State hereafter. The Labor Reformers also promise not to support any such radical Democratic changes as those proposed. They express themselves as not ready to become merged into the Democratic Party, but determined to maintain their organization and hold the balance of power, but at any rate the State is saved from the imposition of Tammany machinery for the carrying of elections against the popular vote, and the Republicans can reborn themselves by honest work, which is pretty sure to be done.

THE NEW-YORK CUSTOM HOUSE.

Returns of exports from the Port of New-York during the month of May were received on the 16th inst., four days earlier than the limit allowed by the regulations of the Treasury Department. This is one of the indications of improvement as to promptness and accuracy which is taking place in some of the departments of the Custom-house.

The Late Mr. Vallandigham and Chief-Justice Chase—The Latter on the "New Departure."

DAYTON, June 19.—The following letter from Chief-Justice CHASE was received by the late C. L. VALLANDIGHAM a few days after the promulgation of the famous new departure resolution:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20, 1871.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just read the resolutions of the Montgomery County (Ohio) Democratic Convention, and send them herewith, together with your remarks and those of Mr. COOK. You have rendered a great service to your country and the party—at least such is my judgment. May God bless you for it. Nothing can be truer than your declaration that the movement contemplated by the resolutions is the restoration of the Democratic party to its ancient platform of progress and reform. I know you too well to doubt your courage or your fidelity to your connections.

Very truly yours,
S. P. CHASE.

Hon. C. L. VALLANDIGHAM.

Ever since the meeting of the Democratic Convention in New-York, in 1868, whereat VALLANDIGHAM favored the nomination of CHASE, the Chief-Justice has been a firm admirer of him, and it is understood they communicated freely upon politics. The above is the last letter received by VALLANDIGHAM from CHASE.

The Vallandigham Funeral.

DAYTON, Ohio, June 19.—From present indications, the funeral of VALLANDIGHAM, to-morrow, will be very largely attended. The Courts adjourned to-day, after appropriate resolutions of regret were passed, and remarks were made. The meeting of members of the Bar was briefly addressed by Hon. PETER ODLIN, after which Committees on Resolutions and Arrangements were appointed, and the meeting adjourned until to-morrow. Mrs. VALLANDIGHAM is somewhat restored to-day. VALLANDIGHAM's estate is valued at $30,000 or $40,000, clear of incumbrances.

A Desperate Chicago Pickpocket—A Policeman and a Citizen Shot by Him.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 19.—At Lincoln Park, yesterday afternoon, JOHN WILSON was arrested by Policeman JOHN MAHER for picking a lady's pocket. On the way to the station-house WILSON sprung from the grasp of the officer, drew a revolver, and fired three shots at MAHER, two of them entering his right breast. An old man named CHARLES HOFFMAN rushed to MAHER's assistance, and grappled with the ruffian, when the latter fired two shots at him, both taking effect in his left hip. MAHER by this time had somewhat recovered, and fired at WILSON, shooting him in the right breast. WILSON was then secured. Fears are entertained that MAHER will not recover. HOFFMAN's injuries are severe, but not dangerous. WILSON, in all probability, will die. But for the efforts of the Police the latter would have been lynched.

A convention of musical societies, to organize a National Union for the protection of the musical fraternity, met yesterday in Philadelphia and organized permanently, with U. C. HILL, of New-York, as President. A committee was appointed to frame a constitution and by-laws, and to report to-day.

THE COAL REGIONS.

A New Source of Excitement at the Mines.

Hydrophobia Among the Horses and Mules—Continued Agitation About the Pittston Disaster—Inspector Williams Still in Trouble.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PITTSTON, Penn., June 19.—There is great excitement here this morning in consequence of a rumor that a mule belonging to the Pittston and Elmira Coal Company had been seized with hydrophobia and bitten several horses and mules about the stables and yard connected with the Ravine shaft. Whether the animal was rabid or not has not yet been decided, though it is a fact that he died in great agony about 10 o'clock this forenoon. He had bitten four horses and twelve mules before his malady was discovered. The physicians are of the opinion that the brute was not mad, but this is as yet by no means certain. All the animals bitten have been confined in close quarters to await further developments.

Although the excitement caused by the late frightful disaster has apparently passed away, the determination to bring the party or parties, by whose negligence so many lives were lost, to justice, is daily growing stronger. The Working Men's Benevolent Association have passed very strong resolutions, and appointed a committee to prosecute Mine Inspector WILLIAMS for criminal negligence. The members of the Working Men's Benevolent Association allege that they have discovered a collusion between the mine inspectors and BLAKE & CO., proprietors of the West Pittston mine, and they are determined to fully investigate the whole affair in the Committee. Mr. O'HALLERAN, General Secretary of the Working Men's Benevolent Association, is Chairman of the Committee, and he will push the investigation as rapidly as possible. Although this movement has not yet been made public, it is certain that miners will have the assistance and sympathy of the entire community, so Mr. WILLIAMS will find that he has raised a storm it will not be easy for him to allay or escape from.

Restoring the Ring-Pumps at Work and a New Breaker Ready—All But Two of the Rescued Miners at Work.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SCRANTON, Penn., June 19.—The pumps were set to work to-day, and a new breaker is nearly completed at the West Pittston shaft, where the late disaster occurred, and it is expected that operations will be resumed on the 1st of July. All but two of the men taken out of the shaft alive are able to work, and are at present employed about the works.

Barometer corrected for elevation and temperature.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, June 20—1 A. M.—The barometer has risen on the Pacific coast with falling temperature. It is very generally lower today than on Sunday east of the Mississippi. The highest pressure remains in the Southern States. An area of low pressure has passed from Lake Superior southeastward, and is now north of Lake Ontario. The barometer has continued low in New-England. The temperature is lower in the North-west, and higher on the lower lakes. South-westerly winds prevail on the Atlantic coast, and upper lakes, and light winds in the interior. Threatening weather, with light rains have been experienced in the Ohio Valley and westward, but clear, or clearing, weather is very generally reported east of the Rocky Mountains.

PROBABILITIES.

Pleasant weather, with light winds, is probable for Tuesday, from the Mississippi to the Atlantic.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

What One of His Supporters Has to Say About the Democratic Attempt to Gag Him.

From the Wilmington (N. C.) Journal, June 17.

It is not our purpose to defend the course of JEFFERSON DAVIS while President of our struggling Confederacy, or since the close of the unhappy war. He needs no defense. History will take care of that. The scenes of the struggle are too fresh in our memories. Our hopes, our aspirations, our sufferings, our defeat, our present condition control our judgments too much to bear impartial testimony. We must leave it to the decision of posterity. But while his admirers reserve their judgments those who dissent should also remain silent. One thing is quite sure, that if his conduct in the past or in the present is to be made a party question—if the Southern people must necessarily denounce him to prove their fealty to party or their patriotism to the country—then is Southern unity destroyed. We are willing to do a great deal to preserve the integrity of our party, and submit to much to defeat Radical tyranny and despotism. We will approve the platform and vote for the candidates of our Northern friends, but we will not sacrifice our manhood, nor defame our beloved leaders. We may see their errors and deplore them; but we prefer to shield them with our affection rather than exaggerate them to his and our enemies.

None could have regretted more than we that MR. DAVIS should not have preserved that dignified silence on political subjects which had so long marked his public course, not from anything which he has said, for he gave utterance to nothing which might not have fallen unrebuked from the lips of any patriot, but because he could have said nothing which would not have been misconstrued and distorted, and used to injure the very people for whom he would willingly pour out his heart's blood.

We did not require his explanation to see that in his Atlantic trip he did not counsel the Southern people, directly or indirectly, not to abide the situation, or that he advised even remotely a revival of armed resistance, or that anything which fell from his lips was tinctured with disloyalty to the Government. His advice, then, and his explanation now, was to encourage our people to bear their trials with patience, to bow meekly to the majesty of the law—not surrender their manhood, but rather to wait patiently until the returning good sense of the Northern people brings about a reversal of the more obnoxious features in the recent Congressional legislation. We know him for his sentiments whatever may be our opinion of the policy of the advice.

We ask no one to indorse our views upon this subject. They came from one who followed the fortunes of the "lost cause" from the Peninsula to Appomattox. They are not political. We are not of the fire-eaters of the past. We find fault only with those who desire to make the denunciation of JEFFERSON DAVIS a test of party fealty and loyalty to the Government. We deprecate such an issue, but if forced upon us against our solemn protest, then are we false to party and country.

CONDITION OF CALIFORNIA.

From the San Francisco Alta, June 19.

This year is one of the most disastrous in the history of our State—perhaps the most disastrous, so far. The drouth of 1864 was more severe than that of 1871, but our agriculture was less developed and the farmers had less to lose; besides, our condition otherwise was more alarming; our mines were more productive; our population was increasing more rapidly; there was a better demand for labor, and San Francisco, which rests upon the whole State, was more prosperous. A steady stream of emigration is now pouring from California by land and sea into Oregon. The farmers of the Willamette Valley have never known what it was to lose a crop by drouth, and now they are taking from us a valuable class of farmers who are willing to run the risk of other years without rain. If our irrigation schemes should prove successful, we may reasonably hope to bring many of them back; for they will never be contented under a cloudy sky, after having lived in the clear sunlight of California. Those going by sea are generally emigrants from the East, while most of those going by land through Siskiyou County, have been residents of our valleys. The loss for the commerce of this State is very slight, and perhaps their migration will be a benefit to the coast, on the whole, for their departure will be an additional reason for a rigorous prosecution of those measures which must protect us from drouth in the future; and, on the other hand, it will develop the resources of a rich district, dependent for its foreign communications upon our metropolis. The prosperity of California will be greatly advanced by the settlement of a dense population on the coast north of us.

A year of drouth in California is always a year of migrations. The farmers and graziers must move to find more favorable situations. There is a general drift now toward Sonoma, Mendocino, Humboldt and Lake. Counties which have not only more than the average amount of rain, but also a prospect of receiving considerable more than an average share of the benefit from the construction of railroads. Portions of the Guilicos and Collayomi ranchos have lately been sold in small tracts, and several other ranchos are to be cut up soon. The construction of the connecting road from Adelante to Petalums will place Russian Valley in connection with the general railroad system of the State, and will greatly facilitate access and increase travel. The red-wood forests beyond Bodega, are, in many respects, superior to those to the southward. The trees not only grow larger and straighter, but they are in more extensive forests, reaching further back from the ocean, and on account of covering the valleys as well as the hills, they can be hauled as log carriers by rail. In one State so recently supplied with lumber as ours, these forests are of immense prospective value, and plans are now under consideration for running the cars to them, and opening up the timber resources of the north. The wood is of a kind found only in California, and is known both at home and abroad. Much of the timber is too far from the coast to be handy for landings, and there are extensive stretches of coast with no safe anchorage for ships; so that rail communication is indispensable to the development of the natural wealth.

The business and future of the cattle and sheep from the interior valleys generally to the mountains and the northern coast. The pasturage in Humboldt County is said to be very abundant; many of the herds of the southern coast have been driven to Lower California, where the grass has not been stripped so closely. Some of the cattle from Los Angeles have been driven to the eastern slope of the San Bernardino range. From the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys many herds have been sent up into the Sierra, at various points from 1,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea. Yosemite was used for a Summer sheep-pasturage before the Federal Government reserved it for tourists, and Hetchhetchy is now occupied for the same purpose. Usually, however, the best mountain grass is found not in cañons but on ridges or flats.

The Prospects for Immigrants in California—A Different Story.

From the San Francisco Bulletin, June 13.

Every few days a letter is put into our hands making all sorts of inquiries about California. We have answered such questions so often in detail that we cannot consent to go on with this endless repetition of elementary truths. Grouping all the later interrogatories together, the consolidated question is: What chance is there for an intelligent immigrant, with a little money, who expects to live by hard work? In the first place, there are from twenty to thirty millions acres of land, the greater part of which can be bought at prices ranging from $1 25 to $10 an acre. There is much other very desirable land held far above these figures, because it is near to thriving towns, or on the line of railroads. At this date 80,000 will buy a farm of 160 acres, having upon it moderate improvements, and situated any within 100 miles of San Francisco. Half of this sum will buy the same quantity of land without improvements, or with improvements still further from the city. It is not difficult to find tracts of fair grazing land of 1,000 acres in extent, at prices ranging from $1 to $3 per acre. Farming and grazing lands have receded in price somewhat during the last two years. Parties who are obliged to sell cannot obtain, in many instances, much more than two-thirds of the sum which the same lands would have brought three years ago. Prices were carried up by the real estate speculations which prevailed, and have gone down with the general decline. For this reason it is a better time to buy farming or grazing land than it was two or three years ago. In giving the range of prices, such counties as Lake and Mendocino are taken as standards. The prices of large tracts of land suitable for sheep ranges have not declined materially, because the wool interest is coming up, and is now one of the most prosperous industries in California. We cannot undertake to assure any one who chooses to interrogate us that he can do better in California than anywhere else under the sun. We think that a large majority of the persons who have assisted in the State with reasonable expectations during the last few years, are well satisfied with their prospects; and that is as much as can be said of the immigrants to any other part of the country.

We do not consider the occasional drouths a formidable drawback to the prosperity of the country. They are not so destructive to crops as storms, floods, and various kinds of blight which prevail more or less every year, over the country east of the Mississippi. The drouth may reduce the bulk of cereal crops twice in ten years, and even then there will be from half to two-thirds of a crop, and with improved methods of farming ten years hence, there will be little fear of drouth in this State.

Moreover, there is hardly a valley of any extent in the State which will not be connected with a market town by railroad during the next fifteen years. All the vast region north and west of the Sacramento River, as rich in natural wealth as any country in the world, two-thirds of which is not even affected seriously by drouth, will be opened up to settlement by the building of railroads and good wagon roads. In climate and in the extent and variety of natural resources, we know of no more promising country under the sun than the territory so near to our own doors, and yet so remote, because half of it or more is an unbroken solitude. The westward tide of empire, wherever there are not some drawbacks. We only claim that he will find as few here seriously affecting his permanent prosperity as in any of the other States of the Union. Stock speculations, gambling and trading on nothing are overdone in California. But productive industry is not overdone, and will not be during the lifetime of any immigrant now looking hopefully toward this State.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

Harlem Steam-Boat Racing.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

There are two lines of steam-boats running to Harlem in opposition. I was a passenger this evening on the old line Harlem steam-boat Sylvan Glen, which leaves Peck-slip at 6½ o'clock, and lands at Eleventh-street, East River, crossed to Astoria, thence through Hell Gate to One Hundred and Twentieth and One Hundred and Thirtieth streets. The Morrisania, the new steam-boat of the new line, leaves the pier at Fulton Ferry at 6:20 P. M., five minutes after the Sylvan Glen, and lands at Eighth-street, East River, but does not cross to Astoria, so that the boats of both lines reach Harlem about the same time. The trip this evening was a close race, the Sylvan Glen reaching One Hundred and Twentieth-street a short distance ahead of the Morrisania, notwithstanding her detour to Astoria. The forward deck of the Morrisania was crowded with her passengers watching the Glen. On reaching One Hundred and Twentieth-street I overheard a passenger say to his companion that the steam gauge of the Glen indicated a pressure for forty-three pounds to the inch. The companion replied that he would feel well aft for fear of accident. Another passenger, evidently interested in the race, remarked, that the Morrisania was closer on the Glen than she was last night, and that if either blew up it would probably be the Morrisania, and that one of the men at her wheel was the Superintendent of the new line, and he would catch fire if I was known. In reply to a question of another passenger on final landing, I was informed that the new time table bringing these boats close together had only gone into operation the first of the week, and that the boats had raced every night since.

PASSENGER.

NEW-YORK, Saturday Evening, June 17, 1871.

A Response to Mayor Hall's Challenge.

Having seen it stated in the TIMES that Mayor HALL publicly challenges "any citizen" to recall the case of any desperado or culprit whose crime (unless enshrouded in impenetrable mystery) has not for years and years been exemplarily dealt with, (when he was District-Attorney,) as criminals are now.

For his Honor's benefit and the enlightenment of the public, I will refresh his memory by relating an item of my experience. In June, 1867, a Mrs. ESTHER SCHLESSINGER, keeper of a fancy-store in Grand-street, near Bowery, came into the store of JOHN PULLMAN & CO., No.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

From Anglo-Saxon to English.

HAND-BOOK OF ANGLO-SAXON AND EARLY ENGLISH. By HIRAM CORSON, M. A., Professor in the Cornell University. 12mo, pp. 272. New-York: HOLT & WILLIAMS.

Cornell University, through one of its Professors, presents in this volume a valuable contribution in aid of that study of the English language which is becoming so important and so interesting a feature in our modern education. Of the value of this study as one of the means of high culture, there is no doubt in the minds of the most observant and thoughtful educators. What some people would call its practical value, is small. It will not tend much to money-making, to controlling politics, to laying out roads, or to bringing grist to any mill or grinding it when it is brought. Some practical men, so-called, or self-called, may countenance it, and even rejoice over it, because it is the study of a living instead of a dead language. But their felicitations are vain and without reason. The study of old English is no more practical, in their sense of that abused and misused word, than that of Greek and Latin. It will not help more than that of either of them, even in the formation of a clear and vigorous English style. Bacon, Sydney, Jeremy Taylor, Shakespeare, Bunyan, Addison and Cobbet probably knew less of the origin and history of the language they used so forcibly than thousands of young students, not to say of accomplished linguists nowadays, who cannot write a brief essay with point or pith, or grace or strength of style. And as to the question of dead or living, Anglo-Saxon or even Early English is as dead a language as Greek or Latin. They have not been dead so long, but they are no more living. No people now speak or write Anglo-Saxon or Early English. True, we do in our daily life use Anglo-Saxon words, most of them more or less modified in form, and even in meaning; but so do we use Greek and Latin words modified in like manner, and as to the structure of the Anglo-Saxon and the formation of its sentences, they are as unlike, if not as foreign to our modes of thought and expression, as those of the language of Homer and Demosthenes, Virgil and Cicero; more remote than those of Moliere and Voltaire, Goethe and Schiller.

No man will be made a better orator, or a better poet, by learning that the words in which he expresses his thoughts have passed through certain changes, and become subject to various usages and laws of construction during a thousand or twelve hundred years. "Practically" we are concerned in knowing only what words mean now; and our ability to convince, persuade or delight our fellow-men depends upon our mastery of language that will convey thoughts worth conveying to men of our own day and generation. That mastery we have by gift of nature, (Dogberry was not so far out of the way;) Dogberry never is,) by practice and by general mental discipline. But as a part of that mental discipline which goes to the making of an accomplished man, and of that acquirement which helps to make the mentally well-furnished man, the study of language is without a superior in the discipline of the training school; and among languages that are worthy of study, and will repay it, none, at least after Greek and Latin, is more estimable than English, which is not to be despised because it is our own.

What Mr. CORSON has done in the book before us, is to give the student of English the means of tracing the language step by step from the purest Anglo-Saxon, the language of ALFRED, the first crowned and greatest Anglo-Saxon King, down to the English of CHAUCER, the first great English poet. The Cornell Professor does little teaching in this book; and he set out to do little. He gives results; he does not show processes. He gives the scholar only such material and such aids as will enable him to trace and unravel those processes himself.

And first as to material, the objects of study. His selections of authors and passages is in the main judicious, and shows thorough acquaintance with the field of inquiry, and, what is of no less importance, with the needs of learners. Pure Anglo-Saxon is represented in this compendium by the version of the Gospel according to St. John. This may possibly be the translation made by the venerable BEDE, and which was finished on the day of his death, in which case it would represent the best Anglo-Saxon of the early half of the eighth century—BEDE having died in 735. But even were it BEDE's work, it may have been somewhat modified by subsequent transcription, as transcribers were in the habit of modernizing the manuscripts which they copied, and even of leaving on the text traces of their own provincial dialects. But, however this may be, a better selection could hardly have been made than that of this, the most interesting and most gracefully written of the Gospels, as the means of introducing the student to the fount and origin of the English tongue. The translation of the Gospels has this advantage, among others, as a text-book, that throughout it certain words and phrases, which in our received English version are represented by transcripts of the original with anglicized terminations, are really translated into Anglo-Saxon equivalents. For instance: Centurion, hundredes man; disciple, learning-cniht, (a learning youth;) a man having dropsy, wæter-seoc man, (a water-sick man;) resurrection, ærist, (an arising;) Sabbath, reste-dæg, (day of rest.) The familiarity of almost every student with the modern English version of this Gospel will much facilitate his study of the same story, told in what may, with singular propriety, be called the mother tongue. Pure Anglo-Saxon is further represented by selections from Ælfric's Homilies, from King Alfred's versions of Paulus Orosius and of Boethius, and from the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle. This part of the hand-book constitutes more than one-third of the material presented for study—a proportion wisely determined. The student who has gone carefully through these selections, with the aid of even no more of accidence and lexicon than this volume affords, will have acquired such a mastery of Anglo-Saxon as will enable him to read with facility and pleasure any work in that language, and to comprehend its genius and structure. He will then be prepared both to enter upon a minute philological study of Anglo-Saxon, and to trace for himself intelligently the gradual changes by which the language of BEDE, of ÆLFRIC, and of ALFRED passed into that of CHAUCER, of SPENSER, and of SHAKESPEARE.

The transition stage from absolute Anglo-Saxon to absolute English is represented by the three following selections, which are from writings in that form of language called Semi-Saxon:—Layamon's, (or Lagamon's,) Brut, a chronicle in verse of the traditionary history of Britain; the Ancren Riwle, a treatise on the proper rule of life for religious recluses of the female sex, which was drawn up for the use of a small nunnery about A. D. 1200, and the Ormulum, a work philologically remarkable and invaluable, but otherwise utterly worthless—so worthless that it seems to have had no interest even for its time, and never to have been copied, for the only existing ancient copy is reasonably supposed to be part of the author's own manuscript. This Ormulum is the production of a monk named ORMIN or ORM, and is a versified paraphrase of parts of the New Testament with a "practical" commentary worked in. Its peculiar value, aside from its presentation of the language in a certain transition stage, comes from a system of orthography, carried out with the most pains-taking particularity and thoroughness, by which the author hoped—vainly hoped, to express, and, perhaps, even to fix, the pronunciation of his mother tongue as it was spoken when and where he lived. This Orm, in fact, was one of the earliest of those fanatical and uneasy teachers after the impossible—the phonographists. His system was a simple one, and effective as far as it went, and consisted chiefly in the doubling of the consonants after the short vowels. He also used marks of contraction and some accents. A notion of the writer's system may be gathered from these two lines at the beginning of the poem, in which he tells us that,

"Thann bocc is wommedd Ormulum

that is,

"This book is named Ormulum
Because that Orm it wrohte."

A notice of this work brings up a question of some interest, to wit: Is there good reason, and enough, for the distinction, Anglo-Saxon, Semi-Saxon and Early English; or are not these merely arbitrary names given to one language—English—in various stages of development? The latter view is taken by some very accomplished philologists, who say that as our language and those who spoke it were called English at a very early period, Anglo-Saxon being an artificial designation, unknown to the so-called Anglo-Saxon people themselves, and that as the language in question has been spoken by one and the same people in the same country continuously from the conquest of the Britons to this day, there is no more reason in calling it other than English in its earlier stages, than there would be in so calling it some centuries hence, when it will have undergone yet further changes. Anglo-Saxon is an inflected, and English an uninflected language; and the construction of the one differs from that of the other almost as much as that of Latin and Greek, and quite as much as that of German does from the English of nowadays. But those inflections began to pass away, and that construction to change in the very earliest so-called semi-Saxon writings, and traces of them remain not only in the so-called early English of the next succeeding stage of the language, but in the so-called Old English of CHAUCER, GOWER and WYCLIFFE. Indeed, it is not yet settled, even by those who use these designations, whether the Ormulum is semi-Saxon or early English. It is, indeed, agreed on all hands that the proclamation of HENRY III., issued A. D. 1258, and which forms the next selection for study in Prof. CORSON's book, is English. But, it is urged, why should such language as this be called English, (and English without doubt it is,) when that of the Ormulum is called something else? And if, then, the Ormulum is English, why not the language of an immediately preceding stage, which differs again from that but slightly? Where shall the line of demarcation be drawn? We give here the first paragraph of this important proclamation, that those of our readers who have an interest in a subject which increases in its hold on popular attention daily, may see a specimen of a language which is admitted by all philologists to be English, and that they may form for themselves some notion of the question to which we are now giving such passing notice as is possible in a newspaper review of a text-book in philology:

"Henr' thurg godes futtume King on Englenn[e]londe Lhouerd on Yrlonnd', Duk on Norm'on Aquitan' and eorl on Anjow send igrettinge to alle hise halde ilæred and ilæwed on Huntendon' shire' thatt wiss[e]o we wel alle thatt wrillen and write shulenn, thatt vre redemann alle other the moare dæl of heom thes beoth leheasen thurg us and thurg theast loandes folk on vre kunneriche, habbeth idon and schullen don in the worthnesse of gode and on vre treowthe, for the freme of the loande thurg the besigte of than to forentiseide redesmen: beo stedfæst and ilestinde in alle thinge abuten ende."

The look of this is much modernized by our use of th for one of the Anglo-Saxon letters which expresses one form of that aspirate, and of g for a character, itself a modification of the Anglo-Saxon g, and which in Semi-Saxon and early English has the force of y, of g, and of gh. But the passage above will, even in its modernized form, seem to most intelligent and educated readers, who have not made a special study of the history of their mother tongue, to be as far removed from the language which they know, and use, and call English, as French or German is, and it will illustrate the position taken in the first part of our article, that, as to the question of dead or living, Anglo-Saxon, or even early English, is as dead a language as Greek or Latin. This is not absolutely true, and without qualification; but it is true to all intents and purposes. There are words in this proclamation which the average English-speaking man of today cannot understand, although it is as truly English as any leading article in today's TIMES, and even more purely so; but so there are words in that article which would be incomprehensible to any Englishman of HENRY III.'s time, and which a Roman of CICERO's day, or a Greek of ARISTOTLE's could understand without difficulty. The question as to inherent propriety of the division of the languages spoken by our race into Anglo-Saxon, Semi-Saxon, early English, old English and modern English, will probably not be decided by universal consent for some time to come; but this division may yet be accepted as convenient, and as sufficiently just for practical purposes.

The subsequent selections presented for study by Prof. CORSON are made with judgment and taste, both as to their intrinsic interest and their philological value. The most noticeable of them are those from Sir JOHN MAUNDEVILE's Voiage and Travaile, from Piers Ploughman, and from the Wyckliff or Wyckliffite version of the Bible. The first of these is interesting as the earliest literary work known to be extant in what is called the old English form of our language, and also as the model "traveller's tale" of our people. It is the forerunner of Baron Munchausen's wonderful and truthful stories. The second and third are the most admirable and valuable monuments of our early language and literature before CHAUCER; we had almost said before SHAKESPEARE and the received translation of the Bible. Piers Ploughman should be read by every loving student of English literature, of English history. It is the earliest really poetical work in our language, and one of the finest. For wit, for humor, for satire, for pathos, for living pictures of men and manners, for a knowledge of the motives and the feelings of men, this work of WILLIAM LANGLAND (if indeed he were its author) stands in the first rank of poems of its class. It is the great epic of the poor, the "simple" man of five hundred years ago, and tells in the most touching manner the sad story of his weary, woeful life. It is thoroughly English in spirit and in style, and its philological value is almost equal to that which it has as a work of art. Of WYCLIFFE's translation of the Bible, enough has been said by critics of repute to make its great value in the history of our language known even to the general reader. Too much could not be said on that score; and Prof. CORSON has done well in presenting students not only with copious extracts from it, but, in some instances, with the Latin Vulgate version, from which it was translated; in others, with PURVEY's revision, made within ten years of the first translation. The value of the English words used by WYCLIFFE can thus be determined by the student for himself in a manner far more useful to him than if he did it with the aid of notes, comments and a mere copious glossary.

This brings us down to CHAUCER and GOWER—writers who, for our purpose, are modern; and, referring to our last remark, we will say that, although Prof. CORSON has erred on the side of giving too little aid to the student, this is better than giving him too much. A young man who takes up this book, and with the aid of his knowledge of his own language and a moderate acquaintance with the Latin, (without which study of language is impossible,) and after the study of the Anglo-Saxon and Old English Grammars, given by Prof. CORSON, (exceedingly compressed although they are,) cannot make himself master of the contents, may better abandon the study of language, not to say of philology, for some department of human endeavor better suited to his taste and his capacity. And as for ordinary class-work at colleges and high-schools, the "coaching" deficiencies of the text-book (to those for whom it is deficient in this respect) will be made up by the teacher. Nevertheless the Glossary needs Prof. CORSON's attention, when he proposes a revised edition, both in the way of addition and of excision; for instance a word like chevynesse should certainly be inserted, and one like childisl might well be omitted. A more complete reference of derived words to their roots is also desirable for a book which will be largely used by autodidacts, or, to use a better word, self-teachers.

We remark that Prof. CORSON clings to the conventional notion of declension and case, although there is no declension, and consequently no case. For instance, in his Old South English Grammar he tells the student that "the masculine nouns of the second declension are declined thus:

	Sing.	Plural.
Nom.	Sune.	Sunes or Sunen.
Gen.	Sune.	.....
Dat.	Sune.	Sunes or Sunen.
Acc.	Sune.	Sunes or Sunen.

He goes through the same formula (which is hardly even a formula) in regard to the feminine nouns cwene, lunge and lufe. What could be plainer than that in Old South English these nouns had become indeclinable, as indeclinable as certain nouns in Latin. Neuter norms, like werc, might be spoken of as declinable, for they had one case—a genitive in es, werkes. When will this misleading fiction be exploded and swept out as rubbish?

One little incongruity of detail is also not unworthy of regulation—the running titles at the heads of the pages. In some divisions of the volume the title of the work is given on one page and the particular subject below on the other; in others the latter is given on both pages. Uniformity on such a point is reasonably expected in such a carefully and beautifully printed book, the appearance of which does great credit to the taste and liberality of its publishers. The former method is much to be preferred. It is convenient as well as pleasant in almost all cases to have the general title of book or chapter on the left hand page, and the leading subject named on the right hand. Thus we have properly here on page 204, "Robert of Gloucester," and on the opposite page "Story of Lear and his Daughters," and so on. But the contrary method is adopted in the case of Layamon's Brut, Piers Ploughman, CHAUCER, GOWER, and other selections, in which the name of the author or the work does not appear. The book is so good, both in substance and in form, that it is worth making as nearly perfect as may be. Prof. CORSON has done much to provide in a single volume all that is necessary to enable students to master in a general way the history of the language, whose literature, as he well says, "is the grandest embodiment of what man in his struggles, his secret questionings, his aspirations and his hopes has thought and felt."

THE ELEVENTH-STREET HORROR.

Scene of the Connolly Tragedy—The Inquest Begun by Coroner Keenan—Testimony of the Widow and a Nurse—Strange Aspects of the Case.

The dreadful tragedy at No. 148 West Eleventh-street, which was fully described in the TIMES yesterday, was a topic of conversation in all circles, and had the effect to draw a large crowd of the curious around the house. During the entire day many persons were gathered in the vicinity, and the entrance to the house was sought by scores eager to gratify their curiosity by a sight of the horror within, but they were refused without exception by the policeman on duty at the door, unless intimate friends of the stricken woman, reporters for the Press, or attaches of the Coroner's office.

Within the house, the aspect during the morning hours, was almost unchanged from that described in the TIMES of yesterday. The bodies of the suicide and his infant victims remained untouched upon the bed, where they were found, and were even more ghastly in the glaring sunlight, and with the blood dried and caked, than they had been in the softer gas-light and when the blood was yet comparatively fresh. The room was carefully guarded by a policeman, and no one was permitted to touch the bodies prior to the arrival of the Coroner. The childless widow remained in the room below, attended by her spiritual adviser, Father LAFONT, by Judge QUINN, and other friends, and was said to be in much the same state she had been described to be in on the previous evening, by Capt. WASHBURN. About noon Coroner KEENAN arrived, and, after selecting a jury, who viewed the bodies according to law, the inquest was begun in the office of Dr. CONNOLLY, which is the rear extension-room on the first floor.

The first witness was the widow, Mrs. ELLEN CONNOLLY, but her testimony was not important, as the Coroner did not question her as to events anterior to the tragedy, save only that the deceased and her husband had that short five o'clock Sunday afternoon she discovered that he had locked the door of the room in which he had her two children, MARY AGNES and CLARA BRIDA, in charge of a nurse by Dr. CONNOLLY, the deceased; I had the care of the two children, MARY AGNES, aged two years and five months, and CLARA BRIDA, aged seven months; about a quarter past seven o'clock in the morning, he called me to his room; he then complained of pain in his head, and wanted me to close the windows; at about noon I went to his room and found him nearly crazed; he still complained of his head, and appeared very uneasy—walking from one side of the room to the other; at that time he asked me to bring him AGNES, which I did and left her with him; I then went to attend the baby upstairs, and took her down-stairs; at about one o'clock the doctor's bell rung for me again, and I went up, when he appeared somewhat easier; he was then nursing the child; at about four o'clock he rang for me again; I went to his room, taking the baby with me; he then said AGNES wanted me; attended to her, and then the dinner bell rang; I asked him if he wanted any dinner, and he told me to bring some to him and the child; I brought the dinner up, and then he appeared very much excited; he sat down and ate some; I left him eating; Mrs. CONNOLLY told me to come down and let him attend to himself; I was down about ten minutes, when he rang again; I went to him, and he asked me the cause of my going down-stairs; I told him; he said me to remain with him; I was called down-stairs again, and I went; the bell rang again, but I did not go up; he came down-stairs inquiring why I did not answer the bell; Mrs. CONNOLLY told him the reason; he then went upstairs, and soon after came down again and took the baby from me and went upstairs; I followed him immediately upstairs and found the doors all closed and locked; I came down and told Mrs. CONNOLLY; I went to his door again, knocked and called, but got no answer; we afterward tried to open the door, but could not succeed.

After the conclusion of the examination of this witness, a pecuit was given for the burial of the bodies, and the inquest was adjourned until this morning at 10 o'clock, when additional facts bearing upon the case will be elicited. The testimony cut of the mere fact that one of the keys to Dr. CONNOLLY was discovered, and that the key of the door was not upon the inside when it was burst open. Capt. WASHBURN has been quoted as authority for the latter statement, but he has never made it. The evidence of suicide was too plain to be caused by the most skeptical, and no attention is paid to any other theory of the case.

The conduct of Mrs. CONNOLLY during the inquest was singular in the extreme. She signed her name to her testimony "Mrs. Dr. J. J. CONNOLLY," to the astonishment of those present. When ANNA ELLEN MATILDA were asked for, insisted that she had written her name. She insisted upon being first examined by the Coroner, saying she knew all about the matter, but as will be seen, her testimony shed no light whatever upon the tragedy. After her evidence had been taken, Judge QUINN and others sought to take her from the room, but she refused to go, and said to Judge QUINN that he knew the reason why. While the nurse-girl was testifying, Mrs. CONNOLLY several times made gestures as if deprecatory of her statements, but did not otherwise interfere.

After the departure of the Coroner the undertaker was permitted to prepare the remains for burial.

STEPHENS has bought an interest in the Atlanta (Ga.) Sun, and it is announced therein that its political department will hereafter be conducted "under his advisement, direction and general control." With wondrous magnanimity the Cincinnati Gazette comes to the relief of its political enemies in their sad dilemma. It suggests that Gen. Accusations of other and even more disgraceful crimes are made against him.

The Democracy of Delaware having reiterated its announcement that there is a white man's party, the Wilmington Commercial suggests for their consideration the following No New Departure ticket: For President, GOVE SAULSBURY, of Delaware; for Vice-President, WILLIAM SAULSBURY, of Delaware. Both these gentlemen, it says, (thanks to brother ELI, who is in the United States Senate,) are out of office, and don't accept the situation.

Here is a little figure of speech from the Richmond Enquirer of yesterday: "In social and political matters, many seek to gratify their spiteful feelings under an unpleasant environment by nursing the illusion that Obstinacy is Principle. The course of the world does not suit them, and they refuse to submit to it; and they call their kicking against the sides of the iron leviathan which plows the great ocean of history—Principle."

Speaking of one JEFFERSON DAVIS, the Montgomery (Ala.) Mail says: "This Southern gentleman needs no watching, for the whole world could not induce him to pass one hair's breadth beyond any obligation he may have assumed, express or implied." Let us see. Was JEFFERSON DAVIS the name of a man who several times took an oath to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States? and if so, did he assume any obligation, "express or implied?"

California sends us another of its remarkable little stories, through the medium of the Los Angeles News, of the 3d inst., the same being as follows: "While 'Uncle' BILLY RUBOTTOM was engaged, a few days ago, in quarrying stone near the top of a very high hill near his residence, he struck a promising lead of petrified whales. The bones are very numerous and completely turned into stone. The vertebræ, particularly, were found in great numbers, and are easily recognizable from their peculiar form. How the whales got up there, and how long they have been there, are questions for geologists to whom the discovery offers a fine field for examination and research. The presence of the remains of roaming animals upon such an elevation is a fact difficult to explain."

VALLANDIGHAM.

The Full Report of His Last Talk on Political Affairs—His Views of National Questions.

CINCINNATI, June 17.

To the Editor of the Cincinnati Times & Chronicle:

The startling announcement is just posted on your bulletin that at 9¼ this morning CLEMENT L. VALLANDIGHAM died at Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio. That this announcement will fall on the public mind with as effect that a similar announcement in the case of the very fewest number of prominent men in this country would produce, is a fact beyond dispute. Of his past history in connection with the politics of this State and the nation at large it is perhaps not necessary for me to speak. Others better acquainted with the man, socially and politically, will pay their tributes of regard or review to his memory. Nevertheless, I am pressed by the memory of a recent conversation, brought vividly to my mind by the sad announcement of today, to put into this shape some of the particulars of that which was probably the last political interview that Mr. VALLANDIGHAM had.

A week ago yesterday I received directions to go to Lebanon to report the proceedings in the McGehan murder trial, then in progress there, in which, as the leading attorney for the defense, Mr. VALLANDIGHAM was to play a prominent part. The day of my arrival, at the noon recess of the Court, I met and received at the hands of a friend an introduction to Mr. VALLANDIGHAM, whose acquaintance, as counsel in the case, I deemed it essential to the performance of my reportorial duties that I should form. The way in which I received it was cordially, as to express it, but feebly the earnest appearance with which I was met that every facility in his power should be afforded me in my duties. I had never met him personally before that time, but I am free to admit that all my personal feelings toward the man had taken color from the fierce antagonism to his political actions during the times of strife, that had become, as it were, a part of my nature. Neither was this antagonistic feeling concealed entirely at this my first meeting with him. He then expressed very plainly the opinion that the course of your journal toward him had been anything but mild, or of a nature to afford him satisfaction. I, however, did conscientiously say anything to modify or alter his views of your course, and candidly said so, even at the risk of losing some professional advantages that I had hoped to gain by his acquaintance. This course, however, instead of having the effect I feared, had quite the contrary effect, and seemed at once to place us on more cordial terms. He shook my hand warmly, assured me that this was the day of new departures, and said: "Ask me for anything in my power to give you and you shall have it." Henceforth, and through the remainder of my stay in Lebanon, my acquaintance with this distinguished man began to grow more intimate and personally friendly. To say that he grew upon me, and developed most attractive points of personal character, such as I never before deemed him the possessor of, is to express in the very mildest form my estimate of him, and the real pleasure that I found in the enjoyment of his society. On several occasions he invited me to accompany him to his room to and fro between the Court-room and the hotel, and at other times we sat together in the intervals of recess, talking over the events of the trial and other matters of mutual interest.

One of these talks is now brought to my mind with the vividness of sunlight. It took place the afternoon preceding the night we chanced had been together in conference quite late the preceding night, and in consequence Mr. VALLANDIGHAM came from his room that morning a little later than usual. Meeting him near the head of the staircase, he asked the hour, remarked that he was late to breakfast, and said: "Come to the dining-room while I take breakfast. I want to talk to you."

Such an invitation, of course I could not decline, and now am more than ever gratified that I did not decline. That morning he was feeling very well. The consultation of the night before had satisfied him that the case of his client looked well, and the fact seemed to lift a burden of care from his mind, and allowed him freedom to think and talk of other matters.

After a little inquiry as to the probable length of the trial, his general idea of the case, and some inquiries from Mr. VALLANDIGHAM about personal friends in this city, I said:

"Mr. VALLANDIGHAM, what is your opinion about the alleged difficulty with the tally-sheets at your Convention?"

He said: "I am not fully advised about that matter, but when our Committee meets on the 21st, at Columbus, I shall favor a close examination into it, and if there is any mistake, it must be rectified. It looks to me, from the figures now given, as if there was a marked discrepancy that needs explanation."

This naturally led to other talk about politics. I said, "Well, how much do you think your party will be beaten in the next State election?" He said, "We shall not be beaten at all, especially if you show any signs of discord at your State Convention, or make a ticket out of weak material."

As this I laughed, when he shook his head and said: "Oh! you needn't laugh. I am in earnest about what I say."

"But," said I, "how about those malcontents in the North-west?"

He thought that they could be brought into line and made to behave themselves. "But," said he—and here he warmed to his subject—"this is not a question of immediate success. The question is, which of the great parties of this country is to be the party of progress, the party of advanced ideas. There can be no more political campaigns fought on the issues of the last few years. They are dead. And if the Democratic Party refuses to move to the front, to accept the new order of things, it will simply pass away, and some other party will step up from the earnest, progressive elements of both the old parties, will take possession of the Government."

I inquired: "Don't you think that the campaign of '72 will be fought on the present issues?" He said: "That may be undertaken by our party, but it will fail. A year ago GRANT gave promise of his intention to lead the Republican Party into a new departure, and had he once done it, but a gang of old politicians at Washington held him back and scared him with gabble about defeat until he went square back into the old nets. GRANT is an honest man and would do right if the politicians would let him; but that they won't do. He took the back track on the San Domingo question, in which, apart from the corrupt means used, he was clearly right. I tell you, Sir, annexation of territory and the control of all the outlying fragments of this continent is the destiny of the American people. We shall have San Domingo, and Cuba, and Mexico, and all in time; mark that. We missed the greatest chance we ever had in not getting Cuba during the Spanish troubles. We could have had it then for the mere asking, and in a few years we would have been owners of the richest and most productive piece of territory in the world. Why, they used to talk about me and call me a dictator, Sir. I tell you, Sir, earnestly and honestly, that I never was a dictationist; that I always did believe and now believe that this Union will be perpetuated and extended until it embraces the continent." His denial of dictation views Mr. VALLANDIGHAM thrice repeated, with marked emphasis.

Getting, he talked freely about the parties of the future and his ideas of their composition. I ventured the question: "Why, Mr. VALLANDIGHAM, with the hatred that is exhibited toward you by the dead-loose Democracy, I don't see how it is any longer a party to you." At this he smiled confidently and said: "Why, what can I do? The Republican Party won't move forward. It wants to stick to its old clothes, and my best hope is to get the Democracy to push to the front. However, there is no telling what three months and sixty-five days may bring forth, and of one thing I am certain: If the Democratic Party fails to become the party of progress and advanced ideas, and I from conscientious convictions decide to act with any other political party, that other political party will never stop to inquire what my past political record has been. Parties don't manage things that way."

Those who read may construe this expression as they please. I write it almost verbatim as he spoke it to me. The speaker's earnest manner convinced me that he meant what he said. The same sentiment was subsequently repeated in various forms during our conversations, which lasted altogether for fully half an hour. But Mr. VALLANDIGHAM is dead. His political record is made. The wealth of his social virtues is treasured up in many hearts. None who knew him will cherish more pleasant recollections of him than I will; none will drop tears of more heartfelt sorrow over his grave.

On Thursday evening, when the evidence was closed and we were leaving the Court-room, he called to me and said, "Wall; let us go to the hotel together." Part of the way my brother reporter accompanied us, and after he left us the talk was about the case of MCGEHAN, which, as the day of the closing argument approached, seemed completely to occupy his mind and engross his attention. He was, as I wrote you in one of my letters, preparing for the great legal effort of his life. That, in his zeal to prepare for that effort he sacrificed his life, stands today as the best evidence of the truth of what I have stated. Just before he started out after tea to take an evening ride, he bade me good-by, and said: "I will come to Cincinnati on Saturday night. Don't fail to come and see me." So I parted with a man whom, not knowing, I almost hated, but whom, knowing, I soon learned to admire, and then to esteem. Others will bring their tributes of regard to his memory, but none will be more sincere than mine.

THE INCOME TAX.

Argument of Messrs. Evarts, Miller, and Smith in the United States Court in Philadelphia—Consideration of Direct and Indirect Taxation and Taxation in Proportion to Representation.

A session of the United States Circuit Court was held in Philadelphia on Saturday, by Justice WILLIAM STRONG, to hear an argument upon the constitutionality of the income tax law, in which Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS, R. SPENCER MILLER, and ASHBEL H. SMITH participated. The parties in interest are Henry C. Lee vs. William E. Leeds; Mary R. Farquhar vs. Horatio G. Sickel, and Clarence F. Clarke vs. the same. The action was brought to recover from the defendants, who are now or were formerly internal revenue collectors of the United States, the amounts of certain taxes which are claimed to have been extra-legally assessed and collected. In the case of FARNUM vs. SICKEL, a tax of five per cent. was levied upon the interest of certain personal estate set apart by marriage settlement for the use of a wife for life. In CLARKE vs. SICKEL, the tax was levied on rents of real estate, on salaries not alleged to have been received in respect to any public office, in LEE vs. LEEDS, upon the profits of the plaintiff as publisher and seller of books; upon profits realized by sales of real estate; upon the interest of promissory notes, bonds, &c., and upon profits derived from the sale of gold and stocks.

I. Whether the 116th, 117th and 118th sections of the act of June 30, 1864, are not void, in whole or in part, as they apply to incomes of individual citizens, for the reason that a tax on such incomes is a direct tax, and must, therefore, be laid on the basis of apportionment, and not of uniformity.

II. Whether said sections are not, at least, unconstitutional, for that reason, so far as they provide for a tax on income derived from the following sources, viz:

1. From the rents or profits of real estate.
2. From salaries of offices or wages of labor.
3. From the profits or emoluments of a trade, business or profession depending on personal skill and labor, without the use of capital.
4. From such profits or emoluments, where the use of capital is combined with skill and labor.
5. From the interest of a real estate settled for the use of a tenant for life, with remainder over.
6. From interest on promissory notes, bonds and mortgages.
7. From the interest of bonds issued by a State to raise money for its own expenditures.

III. Whether, if said sections are unconstitutional and void as respects all or any of these seven classes of income, they can stand as to other classes.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, gives the following synopsis of the argument for the plaintiffs presented by R. SPENCER MILLER, Esq., and Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS:

"After quoting at length a number of legal decisions in support of the point that a tax on income is a direct tax, it is asked, How does the question whether a tax on income is a direct tax or not, stand on reason and authority? No one can read ADAM SMITH's chapter on capitation taxes without understanding that according to his views, derived from the best authorities of a people—they need the language of the political economist. It is to him, then, we must turn for its meaning, and not have recourse to the loose expressions uttered in the halls of a Legislature or a convention. The several States, previous to the adoption of the present Constitution, were, indeed, the sole arbiters of the amounts paid by Florida, Arizona, Colorado, Dakota, Washington, New-Mexico, Utah, Idaho and Montana collected; that is no one will more consciously of the injustice of the present Income law if the framers of the Constitution had but foreseen the power and not at present."

BASE-BALL.

Another Fine Contest in Brooklyn—Mutual vs. Cleveland.

Fully 2,000 people were gathered on the Union Grounds yesterday to witness the first game of the championship series between the Forest City nine of Cleveland and the champion Mutuals of this City, the fine weather and fine prospect of a skilful display on the field attracting the largest crowd present at a match this season. The charge for admission was 50 cents, but at the time of commencing play was half a dollar, and at that price nearly every seat was occupied. After the game had progressed some three or four innings, spectators were admitted at half-price at the lower gate of the grounds. The auctioneer sold the ball to use the game before the announcement, the gold ball for the Mutuals at $14 and for the Cleveland at $7. The betting was on the result of each innings of the game as played, the sports not investing largely on the result.

The Mutuals entered upon the contest with the same nine with which they had won their victory in Boston, and they felt pretty confident of success. The Cleveland club was also out in full dress for the match, and were quite hopeful of victory.

The game began shortly after 3 P. M., with the Mutuals at the bat, and by two important errors they secured 2 runs, not a single run being earned. On the third and fourth innings the Mutuals were blanked, and Cleveland added 2 to their score, leaving the latter ahead by one run. The fifth inning was a blank for both sides, and in the sixth they secured three more runs, after escaping a wasted chance through a bad throw from short field, the Cleveland nine in the interim retiring for blank scores each inning. The total now stood as 5 to 2 in favor of the Mutuals, with two innings to play. The Mutuals in the eighth innings, however,

KINGS COUNTY SUPREME COURT.

Before Judge Gilbert.

THE CARE'S ROCK DISASTER AGAIN.

Camden C. Dike vs. The Erie Railroad Company.—Yesterday morning the Sheriffs of Erie, Tioga, Steuben, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Chemung and Orange Counties appeared before Justice GILBERT, through counsel, and made application to know from whom they were to obtain the money for the services they had rendered in the case of Dyke vs. The Erie Railroad Company.

It will be remembered that plaintiff recovered judgment to the amount of $35,000 for injuries received while traveling on the Erie Railroad, and as the Company refused to hand him a check for that amount, his counsel, Mr. Ward, Beach & Hall, attached a number of locomotives, together with a quantity of iron and lumber, for the purpose of satisfying the judgment. They then appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and filed a bond for the amount of the judgment, claiming that the bond invalidated the execution, and that therefore the proceedings should be taken under it, and that the property should be released.

The Sheriffs refused to do so unless their fees were paid. A motion was then made by Mr. Newell, of counsel for the Company, for an injunction restraining a contempt process, which, as its name implies, did supersede, vacate, or set aside the proceedings taken under the execution. The Company claimed they had a right to ask for it, having filed bonds for the amount of the judgment, together with costs, in case the decision of the United States Supreme Court should be adverse to them; and also alleging that the property attached and in the custody of the Sheriffs amounted to nearly $1,000,000.

In Erie County they state that locomotives, passenger-coaches and other property worth $621,000 has been seized, and in Orange County the total value of the property seized is said to be $121,000. Judge Gilbert appointed a day for the Sheriffs to be heard, and this morning a lengthy argument was had as to which party ought to pay their fees, which are said to amount in the aggregate to about $4,800. Decision reserved.

MARINE COURT.

Before Judge Gross.

"WE ARE RUINED BY CHINESE CHEAP LABOR."

Henry Milljordan vs. Ah Sam Mo.—Ah Sam Mo, whose Christian name is Charles Samuels, was steward on board the American bark Harriet. Milljordan, according to his own story, while the bark was locked in the ice off Sandhurst, went early in the morning to get his coffee. Ah Sam was cutting up his meat, but seized a marine-spike and "went for" that Christian German. Milljordan says he got the marine-spike away, and then the Chinese picked up the butcher-knife and slashed him across the arm twice.

On cross examination he acknowledged that he had had a little difficulty with Ah Sam the night before, and that after Ah Sam came out to him he chased him back three or four yards into the galley and was in the act of slamming the galley door to when he felt the cuts. Judge Gross found for the defendant.

MONDAY, June 19—P. M.

The Wall-street markets today are higher on Stocks and firm on Foreign Exchange, with Gold steady at 112¾@112¾ ₱ cent. On the Stock Exchange the Public Funds are all scarce and on the advance, and on the Treasury Share list there is a decided awakening among the Bull speculators in Lake Shore, North-west, Rock Island, Ohio and Mississippi, Western Telegraph, &c. The change from last week is quite unexpected to the Bear party, and no less unlooked for by the public, who regarded the market through the past few days as unpromising for a "June rise." If the present market should be well sustained for a day or two, the probability is that the month may close upon a buoyant speculation. It matters very little whether the upward movement is engineered by a few inside parties for profit on their favorite Stocks or not. The proof of success or failure will depend upon the inclination of the outside public, encouraged by easy Money and the spirit of adventure in Wall-street on the eve of the Summer vacation, to take, or refuse, the Stocks at the higher figures.

The holders of the Public Funds, as a rule, are not disposed to sell at any price on the existing condition of the Money market. They offer but few Bonds, because unwilling to exchange the National investment on the temptation of much larger interest on Railway Mortgages, simply because the latter multiply too rapidly and in too great competition with each other. The whole amount of business in 5-20s and other United States Bonds today, at the Exchange Boards, was less than $120,000. The advance of Saturday in prices was more than sustained.

The Southern State Bonds were steady. The Pacific Railroad Bonds were generally firm. The Union people are putting up their Bonds and Common Stock. In the other Western Stocks the Lake Shore party advanced the price to nearly 115¾ ₱ cent. The new party in North-west Common advanced the market to 78¼@78¾ ₱ cent. The friends of Rock Island made another firm price, and there was an improved demand for New-York Central and Scrip.

After the late Boards, the following quotations were made as compared with Saturday night:

Our attention has been called to an ingenious Safety Bank Check invented by Mr. H. TORSTRICH, No. 119 Broadway, to guard against the alteration or raising of Checks for small to large sums. Bankers and Brokers would do well to examine the invention and its practical guards against forgeries and alterations.

The Chicago and Rock Island Company invite the early presentation of their July coupons, so that checks may be given, in advance, after examination, payable July 1. See advertisement.

Messrs. GEORGE OPDYKE & Co., No. 25 Nassau-street, will pay the Gold Coupons of the Midland Road on or after July 1.

The Importers and Traders' Bank has declared a Half-yearly Dividend of Six ₱ cent., payable, free of tax, July 1.

Messrs. S. W. HOPKINS, No. 71 Broadway, advertise to pay the July interest on the Bonds of Florida issued to the Pensacola and Mobile Road.

The Philadelphia Ledger says of the coal trade:

"The anthracite coal trade has a little quickened at this point during the last week. The shippers have more orders, at an average advance in the several sizes of coal of twenty-five cents ₱ ton. The operators who have coal to sell profess to believe that coal will not be lower during the present year than it is now, for the reason, as they allege, that the tonnage is so far behind what it was at this time last year it is not within the compass of the present railroad stock of the carrying companies to make up the difference in the time remaining to the end of the season; and they may be right in this. There are others again, however, who favor the idea that coal will be lower, even although the total product of coal in 1871 should not equal that of 1870. The high price of coal during the last Winter and Spring induced unusual economy in its consumption, and as the producers of coal lost the market for the time, they have probably lost it forever. The amount of coal thus saved is not to be made up to any considerable extent now or hereafter. Consumers, pretty generally, seem inclined to take this view of the case, and hence limit their orders closely to current wants. Mining in the Lehigh region is almost at a dead halt, but quite active in all the other anthracite regions. The leading Railroad Company reports for the week ending on the 10th inst. a tonnage of 171,049 tons, against 89,165 tons the same week last year, and for the year 1,943,296 tons, against 1,696,073 tons to corresponding date last year—showing an increase of 247,195 tons. The shipments by the Schuylkill Canal for the week were 32,696 tons, against 3,926 tons in same week last year, and for the season 318,861 tons, against 71,523 tons same date last year, showing an increase of 147,148 tons. The Lehigh Valley Railroad for the week reports a tonnage of 85,377 tons, against 39,830 tons in the same week last year, and for the year 705,807 tons, against 1,712,009 tons to a corresponding date last year—showing a decrease of 1,006,641 tons. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad reports a tonnage for the the week of 39,425 tons, and for the year 147,264 tons, against 1,074,146 tons to corresponding time last year—a decrease of 926,944 tons. The tonnage from Shamokin for the week was 11,262 tons, and for the year 207,574 tons, against 136,601 tons to corresponding time last year—showing an increase of 129,573 tons. The Lehigh and Susquehanna Railroad reports a coal tonnage for the week of 35,978 tons, and for the season 51,970 tons, against 126,803 tons to corresponding time last year, showing a decrease of 74,833 tons. The Pennsylvania Coal Company reports a tonnage for the week of 26,012 tons, and for the year 43,697 tons, against 45,961 tons to corresponding time last year, a decrease of 415,429 tons. The Delaware and Hudson Company reports a tonnage for the week of 58,804 tons, and for the year 240,124 tons against 900,002 tons to the same time last year—showing a decrease of 651,178 tons. Adding to these reports of tonnage of some other sources of small supply of coal, and deducting the tonnage doubled on different roads, we find the whole anthracite tonnage of the carrying companies for the week ending with the 10th inst. amounted to 402,565 tons, and for the year to 3,259,217 tons, against 6,339,197 tons to the same date last year, being a decrease in the tonnage of anthracite Coal of 3,079,980 tons. The production of Bituminous Coal for the week was 88,909 tons, against 41,979 tons same week last year, and for the year, 898,999 tons, against 626,061 tons to corresponding time last year—an increase of 272,937 tons. The total production of all kinds of Coal for the week was 440,574 tons, and for the year 4,139,186 tons, against 7,045,258 tons to corresponding time last year, showing a decrease of 2,906,102 tons. Prices by the cargo rule steady, as follows: Schuylkill Red Ash at $4 25@$4 50; White Ash Lump, $4 25@$4 50; Steam-coal, $4 00; Broken, $4 00@$4 25; Egg and Stove, $4 75@$5 00; Chestnut, $4 25@$4 25. At Richmond vessels are in full supply at $2 25 to Boston, Charlestown and immediate vicinity, $2 to Fall River, $1 90 to Providence, $1 75 to Bridgeport, $1 62½ to New-Haven, and $1 35@$1 40 to New-York, Brooklyn, Hoboken, Williamsburg and Jersey City."

The Mark Lane Express, of June 5, says:

"Although fine overhead, and occasionally sultry in the day time, the past week has experienced some sharp nights and cold days. These fluctuations have deprived us of that genuality so much needed for a steady progress in vegetation, and they again threaten to retard the harvest. With a good three months yet to be provided for matters are not very satisfactory. The grass crop on the full of the first warm rains promised so well, seems now unlikely to yield an average. The general account of the fruit-trees is still worse, and much of the wheat must run short, as do our present stocks of everything. Both hay and straw in many places are nearly used up. Wheat samples keep in number on every market, while stocks diminish in every port, and should a large demand for France return it might be difficult to meet this without straitening ourselves and sending up prices. It is true we have reached to within one penny of sixty shillings per quarter in our general averages, and shillings so long associated to these prices, to make free purchases, and the holiday character of the time has let down values 1s. per quarter in some localities; but hesitation does not increase stock, and necessity often exceeds the bounds of caution. Moreover, the Baltic, though farthest on in the season, shows no sign of resuming, but finds customers amongst neighbors, so that it may be an error to think London the ruling market. If hard pressed for cash we do not quite think France is ruined, or the 'Commune' would not have shown so much wealth in individual possession, and some may yet be found in Paris, as well as London and Brussels, quite available on good security, when once a firm Government is established. But it is on this point that we yet remain in the dark, and for a time seem likely to be so. Nevertheless, the countless millions of Europe must be fed, and if a blight should unfortunately further damage our prospects, our present rates, though high by comparison, with last year's, would only be viewed as moderate and reasonable. The arrivals off the coast since the 26th of May were 8 cargoes, of which 6 cargoes were Wheat, 1 Oats and 1 Beans. Business was reported as follows: Wheat, 10 cargoes in all, viz.: Ghirka, 500; Wallachian, 800; Theodosia, 600; Soft, 350; Salonica, 450. Oats, 6 cargoes: Chilian, 300; Spring, 540. Rye, 1 do., at 320. Barley, 1 do., at 320. Oats, 5 cargoes, at 30s. 9d@32s. 6d. The sales of English Wheat last week were 64,292 qrs. at 52s. 11d., against 56,457 qrs., at 48s. 4d. in 1870. The London averages were 61s. 9d. on 666 qrs. The imports into the Kingdom for the week ending 27th May were 576,084 cwts. Wheat, and 79,497 cwts. Flour."

EUROPE.

Indications of a renewal of the insurrection are said to multiply in Paris. The soldiers are openly insulted by the working classes. Twenty-five hundred have been convicted of insubordination, and sentenced to transportation to New-Caledonia. The Imperial Guard is to be reorganized as the Republican Guard. ....The Assembly, yesterday, passed a bill enabling natives of Alsace and Lorraine living in France to vote, and to sit in the Assembly. M. FAVRE announced that 180,000 prisoners still remained in Germany, but they were returning at the rate of 2,500 a day. The parents of Gen. BOURBAKI have implored mercy for their son of M. THIERS, but the President says the law must take its course. The Press continues to attack the Bonapartists. The Siècle urges a union of the Republicans against the President, "their real enemy forever ascendant." M. POUYER-QUERTIER has recovered his health and resumed his duties as Minister of Finance. ....The Committee of the Spanish Cortes on the Budget has approved the bill to indemnify the Bank of Paris for the withdrawal of the treaty under which it was to have negotiated a Spanish loan. ....Members of the International Society are said to be the ringleaders of the outbreak against the friends of the Pope in Brussels. Several of the rioters were wounded by the civic corps, who had to use their bayonets to suppress the disturbances. The Pope's Jubilee was observed with great ceremony and enthusiasm in all parts of Ireland. ....The Emperor WILLIAM left Berlin, yesterday, en route for Ems, to meet the Czar. ....Tunis is dissatisfied with the treaty recently concluded by its representatives with the Italian Government. ....Two vessels, with yellow fever among the crews, have arrived in English ports. GEORGE GROTE, the historian, died in London, on Sunday, aged seventy-seven. The declaration of Paris of 1856, relating to privateering, was under discussion, last night, in the House of Lords. Earl GRANVILLE said it was not in the power of England to repudiate the treaty, which had been signed by all the Great Powers of Europe.

GENERAL.

Considerable excitement was occasioned yesterday at Pittston, Penn., by the strange fury of a mule, which bit several horses and mules. It is believed to have been seized with hydrophobia, and died in great agony. The bitten animals have been corralled. The miners have appointed a committee to investigate the recent disaster, and already report that they have discovered proof of collusion between Mine Inspector WILLIAMS and the owners of the shaft. The matter will be probed to the bottom, with a view of punishing the guilty parties.

The National Fulton County Bank, of Gloversville, N. Y., was robbed in some mysterious manner on Saturday, at 1 P. M., of securities amounting to $20,000, and currency to the amount of $1,000.

The ambitious City of Chicago presents a record for Sunday as remarkable and quite as fatal as that which we laid before our readers yesterday as the sum of the doings in this City on the same. A pickpocket, in attempting to escape, fired two balls into Officer MAHER'S right breast, and two in the left hip of CHARLES HOFFMAN, who came to MAHER'S assistance, receiving one himself in the right breast from the pistol of MAHER. WILSON, the pickpocket, was only saved from lynching by the Police, but he will probably die of his wound. MAHER lies in a dangerous condition, and HOFFMAN is severely wounded. AUGUST RUFF was drowned by the upsetting of a small boat on the lake, and an unknown man hired a small boat and moved out into the lake, when he was seen to kneel on a seat and in prayer and then jumped overboard.

In the case of ANTHONY H. SWEATEY vs. The North Carolina Railroad Company and DAVID A. JENKINS, Public Treasurer of North Carolina, Judge BOND yesterday decided that the North Carolina Railroad Company, its officers and directors, be restrained by the injunction from paying to the defendant the dividends.

Two freight-trains came in collision on the Erie Railway, near Alden Station, on Sunday morning, completely demolishing the locomotives and a number of the cars. One engineer was badly injured. It is said none of the trains had the signal light.

Perhaps were started, yesterday, at the West Pittston shaft, the scene of the late explosion in Pennsylvania, and a new breaker is nearly ready. All but two of the miners taken from the pit alive are able to work, and are employed at the shaft.

Gen. JAMES H. CLANTON, of Alabama, formerly of the Confederate Army, was examined before the Ku-klux Committee in Washington, and testified that he did not believe there had ever existed any regular Ku-klux organization, and that the only intimidation was that of colored Radicals toward colored Democrats.

The state of political feeling in Monroe, La., is represented in a recent communication to the Treasury Department to be so intensely hostile that the people are alarmed and ready at any moment to resort to bloodshed. Physicians, lawyers and officials attend to their professional duties with loaded revolvers within reach.

The directors of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, together with Sir HENRY PARKES, Gen. SCHOFIELD and others, have started on an excursion to the Big Trees and the Yosemite Valley.

The Department of State has received merely a brief dispatch of the fact of operations at Corea, but no particulars. The Navy Department has no further advices.

The New City Loan.

It is probably a waste of time to call upon Controller CONNOLLY for any information about the transactions of his office, but we would really like to know how he is getting along in negotiating City bonds. The Federal Government keeps the people constantly posted on its financial condition, and keeps up an accurate public record of the sale of its new bonds. Who knows anything about the bonds of New-York City—when they are issued, when or where sold, or at what price? A German paper announced, a few days ago, that three millions of dollars, worth of these bonds were sold in Frankfort at ninety-seven cents on the dollar, but, with this exception, we have no indication of the standing of New-York credit in the money market. Mayor HALL, to be sure, tells us in his message, that the Ring finds it among the easiest of its tasks to negotiate the City bonds, either at home or abroad, but he does not tell us whether they are sold at a premium or at a discount.

We have already shown that the Controller will have to issue during the present Summer at least forty millions of dollars worth of new bonds, in order to meet the demands of last Winter's legislation at Albany, and to pay that proportion of the City debt falling due this year. All these bonds are to be added to the permanent debt of the City, and the people have a right to know, and anywhere but in New-York they would insist upon knowing, how the bonds are disposed of. It appears from the Controller's statement, published in the Corporation Manual for 1869, that in January of that year the average rate of interest paid by the City on its debt was 5 9-10 per cent. We find by the Controller's report, just published, that the average rate paid on the 1st of May, 1871, was 6 5-10 per cent. While the rate of interest paid on the United States debt is constantly decreasing, that paid by the City is steadily on the increase.

It is a noticeable fact that in all the bills passed by the last Legislature authorizing the issue of bonds by the Controller, while the rate of interest is limited to seven per cent., no restriction whatever is placed upon the Controller as to the price at which the bonds may be sold. He can sell them at fifty cents, or even twenty cents, on the dollar if he likes; and at this rate we have no doubt the "Ring" itself would take a good share of them. Indeed, it has already been intimated in quarters usually well-informed, that this is to be one of the means by which our Tammany politicians are to get their customary "rake" this season. Such a thing is at least among the possibilities of the strict privacy that marks all the transactions of the Controller's office. There is nothing to prevent the Controller from selling City bonds to TWEED, SWEENY and HALL, or their "dummies," at fifty cents on the dollar, or even loaning them the money in bank, belonging to the City, with which to make the purchases. They can then throw the bonds on the market for what they will fetch and pocket the balance. So long as the financial transactions of the City are concealed from the public, as they have been for the last three years, there is no species of fraud that is not possible, and the Controller cannot complain if it is regarded by most people as altogether probable.

Wanted—A Democratic Grievance.

It is exceedingly touching to observe the persistent fondness with which the Democratic journals cling to the Ku-klux bill as a basis for attack upon the present Administration. They had pretty well exhausted the common missiles of falsehood, and the polysyllabic shafts of the World, were, if possible, blunter than usual. The Government had obstinately reduced the taxes without hampering the revenue; the Alabama claims had got themselves in so fair a way for settlement that neither the policy of the President nor that of Mr. SUMNER was capable of charging an ordinary political squib. And as for the late amendments, they were fixed in the fundamental law, and not a corporal's guard of Republican voters could be induced to vote the Democratic ticket on the ground that they ought not to be there. At this juncture, the late Mr. VALLANDIGHAM made the bright suggestion that it would be well to let all the old topics alone, "accept the situation" as completely as the nature of the average Democrat would admit, and open fire on the Ku-klux bill. The "conservative" Press of New-York—it likes to be called "conservative" for two reasons, first, because the name is not in nearly so bad odor as "Democratic," and, second, because at heart it is not Democratic at all the conservative Press hailed the suggestion as promising great relief.

The ball was a new ball. The people understood its object well enough, but not the details of its provisions. It certainly placed a good deal of power in the hands of Gen. GRANT. And it would be much easier to make the public believe that it was everything wicked and dangerous, than it would be to repeat the old arguments long since exploded, the old charges long since become disgusting. So the "conservative" Press thought, and so it commenced to act. By liberal use of perversion and misrepresentation, it endeavored to show that the Ku-klux bill was a species of coup d'état, which was preliminary to the appearance of Gen. GRANT as "The man on horse-back with a naked sword," who was about to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, break up the Courts, summon all inoffensive Democrats before drum-head courts-martial, and by violence and bloodshed, pave the way to an imperial throne, from which he would issue edicts to an obedient Senate, dissolve the House of Representatives, and govern the country by means of satraps, principally selected from such of his male relations as he did not marry to foreign Princesses. By vigorous lashing, the World worked itself into a very fair imitation of indignation over the terrible picture, and the "bucolic" Press, as the World politely dubs its country contemporaries, followed suit as well as they could.

They were all doomed, however, to encounter one very unexpected obstacle. The Ku-klux, without whom the bill must lose all its terrors, immediately on the proclamation by the President of his intention to enforce it to the letter, began to skulk into their hiding places. With an obtuseness of political insight that cannot be too severely condemned, they refused to surrender their blood as the seed of the Democratic church. However effective the application of the law to their cases might be, in firing the Northern and Southern breast against the authors of the law, it would leave them where they could derive but cold comfort from the triumph of the Democracy or any other earthly advantage, and they basely and ingloriously declined, however much their party might gain by it, to become corpses. This, naturally, is discouraging to the political hacks who were laboring to make political capital out of the oppressive operation of the law. If no chance is to be given to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, if the innocent murderers and ruffians at whose personal rights under the Constitution the law was aimed, persistently keep out of its range, why it will be very hard work to keep up a very animated fire at the mere abstract letter of the law. The American people are a very busy set, and they have a great deal too much to do to waste time in arguing over an enactment which bids fair to be a dead letter through its very effectiveness, to restrain the liberties of no one, because all keep out of its way, and to lead to no abuse of power, because there arises no occasion to exercise power under it.

We cannot undertake to help our Democratic contemporaries in this quandary. It all comes of being on the wrong side. They have lately seemed to have a realising sense of this fact, and their last step was in the direction of a complete change. Perhaps they may take it into their heads to come all the way over. It is probably the only means to relieve themselves of their present embarrassment. As for the change it would require in their attitude toward men and measures, that is not worth a second thought, in the case of the World, at least, which eighteen months since denounced Mr. TWEED as a thief and a swindler, and now bedaubs with adulation everything about him, down to the very diamonds on his daughter's wedding shoes.

The Meeting of the Emperors.

Now that Europe has seen the "red spectre" laid once more, it may find a fresh occasion for disquiet in to-day's meeting of the Emperor WILLIAM and the Emperor ALEXANDER at Ems. No special reason can be alleged why Kings and Emperors may not, like other people, have a strictly private and friendly talk when the opportunity presents itself. The world has, however, become too well accustomed to the sinister results which trace their origin to such interviews, to be at all disposed to dismiss to-day's conference as a merely formal and personal kind of episode. The two men who are at this moment exchanging confidences at the pretty little watering-place which nestles amid the hills of Nassau, represent the ideas and the aspirations of the two greatest nations of the Old World. There is nothing in the destiny of either Russia or Germany which ought to make them disturbing forces to the general peace of the world. As Europe is at present constituted, it is, nevertheless, far from likely that either of them can pursue the course which history marks out for it, without being the cause of fresh bloodshed. As ELIHU BURRITT lately contended, a "manifest destiny"—geographical and commercial—drives Russia toward Constantinople. Let her approach to the Bosphorus be as guarded as the most cautious diplomacy can contrive, there is a point where she must defy existing treaties and appeal to the arbitrament of the sword. Let the extinction of Mohammedan rule in Europe be proven, however clearly, to be a vast service to civilization, it is almost impossible to imagine that England and Austria should ever become changed enough to stand by and see Russia possess herself of the "sick man's inheritance." Equally with her northern neighbor, Germany has a goal which can only be reached "across the brazen bridge of war." An United Germany is unquestionably one of the best guarantees we can have that the peace of Europe will not be wantonly disturbed. It is too strong to permit any nation to lift the sword without its leave. But it is also too strong to stop short of anything save a universal federation of Teutonic peoples, and this can hardly be the result of anything save a redistribution of geographical boundaries following a great European war.

It is curious enough to note how expansive are the possibilities of the great German idea. The Allgemeine Zeitung of June 3 contained a very suggestive, albeit facetious, and rational letter from "JOHN MICHAEL TEUTZ BAUMWOLL, Anglo-German politician of the future." The communication is suggested by the already celebrated squib, "The Battle of Dorking," and pursues the idea of a German invasion of England somewhat further than is done in that racy sketch. The German satirist draws a graphic picture of the social and political decadence of England, of her international impotence, and her need of strength and renovation. What was done by WILLIAM of Normandy, in the eleventh century, and WILLIAM of Orange in the seventeenth century, may, according to this exuberant German joker, be done by another foreign WILLIAM in the nineteenth century. With the most powerful fleet in the world, added to the most magnificent army, the German Emperor would then be the greatest potentate of history. France could be seized and partitioned, and, as Herr TEUTZ BAUMWOLL informs the Emperor, "Austria, humiliated and helpless, would withdraw from German soil; and your Majesty, master of the Continent, would then, like a new Charlemagne, be able to send your orders from Paris or Versailles if you should get tired of the fogs of London or the dust of Berlin." Stranger things have come to pass, thinks this daring speculator than, "the union of two great Germanic races under a single head, and our pride and satisfaction would be increased ten-fold if the German Empire were made to extend from the Danube to the Shannon, and embrace India and Australia in its ample folds." It is hardly likely that the conference of the Emperors will embrace anything so fantastic as this, yet to the national enthusiasts of Germany the satire is but half a jest, and its production helps to indicate the intermediate possibilities which Pan Germanism has undertaken to fulfill.

An Architectural Reform.

Mr. CHARLES READE is a gentleman for whose abilities we have almost as much a respect as he has himself. What he does not know he evidently deems not worth knowing, and this great truth he is at pains to impress upon the world with a vigor and vivacity of style which go far to carry conviction. Knowing that he is always exactly right, he can neither understand nor tolerate the presumptuous ignorance which disputes his conclusions. Opposition he receives with a certain wondering contempt, which is calculated to extort admiration, and the expression of which is equally captivating.

Mr. READE has lately been instructing his countrymen on the art of building dwelling-houses. What he says will apply to New-York as well as to London, and the defects he points out and the remedies he suggests may profitably be considered. The modern dwelling-house he finds to be a monument of blunders. Its plastered ceilings are wrong, its board floors are wrong. Its windows are casements when they should be simply glazed doors turning on hinges, and, like the doorways, square, when they should be arched. The conical roof is "an idiotic blunder," which weakens the house, obstructs the view, and robs poor people of their drying grounds, and, worst of all, the only means of access to the roof is "a miserable aperture scarcely big enough for a dog." Possibly some daring spirit may demur to the apparent inconsequence of some of Mr. READE'S conclusions. For instance, it is not easy for the uninspired to see how casements "fight against God Almighty and His laws," or the exact connection between revelation and glass doors with three hinges. But waiving these and certain other minor difficulties, Mr. READE'S objections are in the main well taken, and his proposed improvements equally sensible. Especially so is his suggestion for what he calls a "rational roof and universal fire-escape." He would have light iron staircases leading from the upper floors to a flat, metal-covered roof, through an iron-lined door, "which opens rationally on the rational roof." Thereon is to be a large water-tank, which may be used to flood the house in case of fire. Around the roof is to be an iron railing, surmounted by spikes. This, gayly painted and gilded, "would mightily improve our gloomy street." Between every two houses is to be a partition gate with two locks and keys, and a bell to summon the next-door neighbor in an emergency. Many advantages of such an arrangement are obvious. Not the least of these, next to its great utility as a fire-escape, is the use of the "rational roof" for what Mr. READE poetically calls "in Summer heats a blest retreat." A little ingenuity and taste, the addition of a few flower-pots and trailing vines, an arbor, perhaps, or, as our architectural novelist suggests, an awning, would convert the roof into a miniature hanging garden, pleasant and breezy enough in the long Midsummer evenings.

There is no doubt that in this matter of dwelling-houses modern builders show oftentimes unaccountable stupidity, not to mention lack of taste. Mr. RUSKIN pointed out long ago, with his usual fervor, the æsthetic defects of our domestic architecture. A moderate regard for the requirements of art would, without at all enhancing the cost, greatly add to the exterior and interior attractiveness of our houses. An arched window would cost no more than a square one, while it would be infinitely more pleasing to the eye. The same principle applies in the construction of rooms. But our builders seem to have no conception of any but the straight line, and hence in our streets and interiors we find a rigid formalism and monotony of style which to a cultivated taste becomes really depressing. Indeed, it may be said without exaggeration to have even a more lasting and pernicious effect on the culture and genius of our people. Mr. RUSKIN has found a vigorous coadjutor in Mr. READE. It will be indeed wonderful if between them they shall not be able to work some amelioration of our present architectural barrenness.

Threatened Insubordination at West Point.

The promulgation by the Secretary of War of the proceedings of the Court-martial which tried Mr. SMITH, the colored cadet, finally disposes of his case, and will, it is to be hoped, be the last general order in which his name appears, until he graduates an officer of the army. His sentence of dismissal having been commuted, Cadet SMITH will commence with the new Fourth Class, in July, with as good opportunities as any other member, and will also enjoy the sympathy and companionship of NAPIER, another member of his race, who has recently passed the requisite examinations, mental and physical, and has been admitted to the Military Academy. The appointment of this second colored cadet will make the academic course of each necessary, since, in case of any fancied injury or affront, they can consult together, as boys do, and are, on that account, more likely to act wisely than either would alone.

The chief cause of trouble at West Point during the past year, has not been in any way connected with the presence of a colored boy in the ranks, but because of a breach of soldierly honor on the part of two white members of the corps. Two plebes deliberately lied to one of their officers, and for this offense they were expelled by the First Class, without any color of authority other than that by which a mob hangs a horse thief out West. Congress intended to punish this unwarranted action by expelling the entire class, but having gone about the matter in an illegal way, their action proved nugatory. As BAIRD and PLINCKINGER, the expelled cadets, are to re-enter the Academy in July, it is reported that the cadets of the older classes propose to confirm the unwarranted action of the present graduating class by holding no intercourse with these two offenders, except such as may be necessary in the discharge of their official duty. Such a course as this will be regarded as a denial of the power of the Executive to reverse, or set aside the decision of an illegal Court of cadets, and would be equivalent to arrogating for such a body greater powers than are vested in a regularly-constituted General Court-martial of officers of the most exalted rank. Notwithstanding the distinguished services which graduates of West Point rendered the country during the rebellion, the Academy itself is not, and never is likely to be, a popular institution. Insubordinate conduct like this, would therefore give its enemies a good ground for attacking it that they might be successful, as they have often declared they would be, in accomplishing its abolition. It is not alleged that the offending cadets have committed more than a single offense, and, although they have never been legally convicted of it, their fellows propose for another reason to ostracise them forever. As Senator CARPENTER intimated in his address to the graduates, it is not to be expected that Congress will allow a body of boys to override their decision and that of the President. Even those who were inclined to palliate the original offense of the cadets, on account of the purity of the motive which prompted it, would not uphold them in further resistance to authority, and it would, therefore, be sheer fool-hardiness in these embryo soldiers thus to exasperate the enemies and alienate the friends of our National Military School. We trust, therefore, that this report that the cadets intend to cut Messrs. BAIRD and PLINCKINGER is untrue, and that when these young gentlemen again arrive at the Point they will find their former comrades ready to forget and forgive the past. The unpleasant complications which have arisen from the illegal treatment of this case should teach the cadets the evil effects of trying to take matters in their own hands. Officers are in charge to take cognizance of breaches of discipline, and Court-martials to administer justice in such cases, so that the cadets will do well in future to save all offenses and offenders to be dealt with according to law by the proper authorities.

MINOR TOPICS.

Mr. ELY, counsel for one of the City railroad companies, suggests in another column that the Press has misled the public in regard to the great profit of City railroads. The public belief undoubtedly is that the railway companies make money. The Press is responsible for that belief, inasmuch as it has circulated the facts on which it is based, and, in some cases, drawn the obvious inference from them. The companies themselves have done a great deal to foster the opinion by making "railroad legislation" at Albany notoriously a very corrupt feature of each year's session. If the present companies are not making money, there is a very unaccountable expenditure of funds every year to obtain or prevent a chance of competing with them. If Mr. ELY would give us a bona fide statement of the value of the unwatered stock of the various railway companies, the price, say, at which stock can be bought today, he would throw more light on the question of the companies' profits than by the somewhat vague propositions he submits.

The World says that "the New-York Democracy have been for more than a year openly calling all men, West, South and East, to the platform of a progressive Democracy." If they have, their "call" must have been as ineffectual as Hotspur suggested that Glendower's appeal to the spirits might be. We don't know exactly what the World means by "the platform of progressive Democracy," but we do know that in May, 1870, the New-York Democracy met in convention at Rochester, and nominated a Judge of the Court of Appeals on the express ground, avowed at the time, that he was a politician, and would use his best endeavors, as Judge, to nullify what RICHARD O'GORMAN, the spokesman of Tammany on that occasion, stigmatized as the "so-called amendments to the Constitution."

The conflicting accounts that have been published of the terrible tragedy in West Eleventh-street on Sunday, indicate a studied attempt on the part of those who ought to know something about the facts either to falsify, misrepresent, or conceal them. It is therefore the duty of the Coroner, however disagreeable the task, to institute a searching investigation into all circumstances which may tend to throw light upon the affair, both anterior and subsequent to the time the tragedy is supposed to have taken place. The line of examination adopted at yesterday's inquiry was hardly such as to induce the belief that the matter is to be so thoroughly sifted as it ought to be.

Exactly what will be the result of the absurd attitude of the Pope toward the Italian Government at Rome, has been said is a matter of some doubt to ordinary critics. We are happy to announce that the World has come to their rescue and furnishes the following solution, in one of its happiest specimens of mingled a priori and a posteriori reasoning.

"If one may judge of things to come by the light of things that have been, one would be more inclined to anticipate a concession of power about the head of the Church than a dethronement of the Papal authority from the demonstration in one city of the Italian monarchy and of the Catholic Pontificate."

This is the sort of thing which makes the World the object at once of the envy and despair of illiterate Democratic editors. Nothing but a "congestion" of harmless ideas about their heads, and a "delinquescence" of all common sense of expression, could ever enable them distantly to approach it.

The Brooklyn Eagle takes exception to the criticism of the TIMES on local taxation in Brooklyn. It does not, because it cannot, dispute the accuracy of our figures or our inferences, but it thinks we have "belittled" the work of reform in that city, and pictures itself on its share in reducing taxation this year. We have stated the simple truth in regard to Brooklyn taxation, and have exposed some of the pretenses to reform and reduction which were false. Doubtless this is "belittling," but that is not our fault. As to the Eagle's share in the reduction of taxation, that is unquestioned. It is, in fact, a matter of record. The reduction amounts to $6,000, and was accomplished by means of an Investigating Committee, which compelled the journal in question to declare that sum from its stationery bills. We have no desire to rob the Eagle of the credit of this. Indeed, we desire the public to remember it when-over the Eagle pops in its claim to a reformer.

Mere Talk. About the Washington Treaty. The Fishery Question. Mining Affairs. Miscellaneous Matters.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TORONTO, Thursday, June 15, 1871.

The principal topic of discussion here is the how far the Treaty of Washington, by which the pending difficulties between Great Britain, Canada and the United States are to be settled, is constitutionally to be supported. The people of this country, from the outset, interested in that portion of the treaty which submits questions, and provides a tribunal to arbitrate upon certain questions to be taken under jurisdiction of the great opposite Gulf and Dominion territories, it would certainly be unfavorable to the treaty as it stands. Fortunately, however, this is not the case, and the sufficiently apparent that public sentiment, whether first carefully sought or almost universal expression of the terms proposed, is rapidly changing. It is but few days since there were no party questions, no discussions, no wrestlings between Ministers upon the treaty with the representatives of the United States. Instead of a general indignation on the subject, the gentleman with whom some of our politicians associate the treaty and provision. Canadian dissatisfaction in connection with it appears to have followed, and men of all parties accept that the opposition of the assailants is truly humiliating, when it is seen that they boldly ignore their former protestations of loyalty and attachment to Britain, while they denounce the Imperial authorities and charge them with a desire to sacrifice the rights of the people of these Colonies. In declaring that our best interests have been sacrificed, and that no equivalent has been given for the free navigation of the St. Lawrence, or the so-called surrender of Canadian rights in the fisheries, the opponents of the treaty seem to have forgotten that the Government and Legislature, some years since, extended a general invitation to foreign shipping, but particularly that of the United States, to use our inland waters, with the view, of course, of drawing the carrying trade of the lakes down to the St. Lawrence. So desirous was our Government at that time of securing business for the canals, that they made concessions in favor of American shipping, which gave offense at first, but ultimately were heartily approved of by all, who saw that it was a point gained to obtain an increase of business to the river and canals. It is argued that the freedom of the fisheries and the navigation of the St. Lawrence should not have been conceded on any terms short of the restoration of reciprocity. The public were deluded by our public men when the impression that there could be no settlement of our disputes with the United States without a return to reciprocal trade. All sorts of predictions were hazarded on that supposition, and now that they have been falsified the opponents of the treaty seek revenge in abusing England, and boast that "the Yankees have been too smart for the British Commissioners." There is a wonderful amount of nonsense talked over the treaty, but the Dominion Premier comes in for a heavy share of denunciation at the same time, being accused of a total disregard of the rights of Canada in signing what all really sensible people must see is the only means of arranging the existing differences. The objections raised have not been confined to the political opponents of the Government, but many Ministerial supporters have uttered protests and called upon the Cabinet to refuse ratification. The eyes of most of them, however, have been opened to the true position of affairs, and they will not be parties to the prosecution of the taken views on the treaty. Nothing is clearer than the fact that the object of getting up the present excitement is to create capital for the next elections; indeed, some of the orators of the day who are making it their business to assail the treaty, do not hesitate to say that the design is to hurl the men now in office from power. Somewhat mild at the beginning in their objections, they have become perfectly frantic, and they are not likely to stop short of uttering the rankest treason. The fishery question appears to be the least understood here, and the arrangement proposed greatly undervalued. The admission by Canadian fishermen into the United States market is not so fully appreciated as it should be; it is not looked upon as a boon, as it certainly will prove, and confer an advantage that could not have been expected. The value of our fresh water fisheries will be greatly enhanced by the treaty, especially now that the fishing on the north shore of Lake Superior has become so important. Every year the lake fishing, now that it is under strict supervision, is growing more valuable, and in the course of a few years the fresh water fishermen of Canada may have cause to thank the framers of the Treaty of Washington for the wise provisions it contains respecting the free admission of our fish into the markets of the United States. The very best effect has been produced on the public mind by the announcement that everything done by the British Commissioners was in accordance with instructions from the Imperial Government, and it is believed that Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD will now consider himself at liberty to speak out, as it is understood he intends doing in this city shortly. The two opposition leaders have been attending political demonstrations throughout the country for the past few weeks, at all of which they have made the treaty their great theme. It becomes necessary, therefore, that the Premier should have an opportunity of replying to their statements, and that it appears, he intends to do, and a public meeting will be called for the purpose.

Mining on the north shore of Lake Superior is coming into importance, and quite an excitement has been caused by recent discoveries of rich silver mines. It is only of late years that mining in Canada has had any importance attached to it. Copper was found many years ago on Lake Superior, but the lack of enterprise caused the mines to be neglected, with the exception of Bruce mines, which have been and still are worked by an English Company. The discovery of silver ore at Port William who expected to give an impetus to mining, but it did do so for a time, but the working of the mines was so hampered with restrictions imposed by the Government that operations were greatly retarded, and for a considerable space really nothing was done. Earnest representations, however, had the desired effect, and the restrictions were accordingly removed. Still those who were most interested appear to have been afraid to venture much, and, as a consequence, they were induced to sell out. The Montreal Company, who hold the chief interest in the mineral district, has done much to develop the mineral wealth of the Thunder Bay region, but perhaps why they did not realize the anticipations they had formed, and, as a consequence, they disposed of every thing to an American company for the trifling sum of $300,000. Silver Isle, in Thunder Bay, formerly the property. Three years ago it was known to contain the richest veins of silver ever seen, and subsequent examinations have shown that it is unquestionably the most valuable mineral discovery ever made in this country. The new Company worked the mine all last Winter, and have already shipped this year well nigh one thousand barrels of ore. It is not flattering to Canadian enterprise that an American company should have stepped in to realize a fortune, as they shortly will do out of the silver mining near Fort William. Not only are the mines at Silver Islet worked to an advantage, but others will soon be in successful operation. At McKellar's Island, Black Bay and Michipicoten further discoveries have been made, and records are floating thither to the expectation of coming riches. There can be little, if any, doubt that the whole range of the high ridge which skirts the north shore of the great lake is rich with ores of various kinds, but particularly silver, copper and lead; and there ought to be spirit enough among our own people to look after—but what is the consequence? Why, several parties of Americans are now entering the north shore, and making a thorough exploration, which might have been done years ago. It is known that prospecting parties recently left Sault Ste. Marie on a tour of exploration, and it is beyond question that they will succeed in making quite as great discoveries as have already been made; they are certain to be rewarded with such a show of the precious metals as has never before been made. The exploration might begin at Bruce mines, and be continued to Fort William, but the abundance of ore of various kinds will prevent a complete survey, and no one need be surprised to hear that the yield of even a portion of the range will be very great.

The experiment agreed to at the last session of the Ontario Legislature, by voting $50,000 to be expended in clearing a portion of certain belts of land in Muskoka for settlement, is about to be tried. A few acres of each lot will be cleared and a log-house will be erected, the Government making a free gift of the same for the Improvements made. The township of Ryerson, said to be the best in the Muskoka district, has been selected for the experiment, and one hundred lots will be prepared, that is, a few acres of each will be cleared and a house erected ready for the reception of intending settlers. In this way much can be done to alleviate the hardships generally endured upon new lands who know nothing about hewing out homes in the wilderness. The experiment is almost certain to succeed, if it is carried out on an extensive scale, as it probably will be ere long. The Government have been tardy in commencing work they ought to have been finished before this, and, as a consequence, there will not be sufficient homes provided for the applicants, who must necessarily be numerous. This for the congestion of the season has been large, and a fair proportion of these arriving remain in the country.

It is to be feared that harm has been done by the highly-colored representations of parties interested in the settlement of the new province of Manitoba. Few will doubt that there is much fine territory west of Fort Garry, but the distance to it is so great that the work of labor is sensibly felt; and as all the building material must be carried a great way, it is consequently so enormously high that buildings cannot be put up fast enough to meet the demand for them. Large numbers of persons are flocking into the province on the strength of the glowing accounts they hear of the fertility of the soil; but, although they may manage to get through the Summer, they are certain to be homeless in Winter. The want of timber is the great drawback to Manitoba, and it cannot, therefore, be rapidly settled without exposing the settlers to untold hardships. Even more than probable that the large quantities of goods sent forward from this province will cause heavy losses, as a supply of provisions, which would be a great deal in the way of supplies, yet liquors and groceries have been sent sufficient to serve double that number of people. There is some doubt as to propriety of providing stocks to last for many years to come, as it is urged that it will be to their advantage not to encourage the means adopted to supply Manitoba with goods that are really not required.

Overcrowded Cars—Another Raid—A Blockade of Three Hours.

Owing to the firm stand made by the staff of Mr. BUNGE'S Society, on Saturday evening, in stopping the overcrowded cars on the "green" or cross-town line, and compelling the conductors to reduce their human freights, the Company on Monday morning sent down four horses to several cars to bring over the numerous working men and mechanics from the Grand-street Ferry. On Sunday evening notice was sent up to the depot that officers of the Society would be detailed to stop all overloaded cars, unless extra teams were hitched on. The Company, however, were wise and acceded to the reasonable request in the morning. Last evening the demonstrations were again on the track from Fourth to Twenty-third-street. Here all the work of Saturday had to be done over again. The cars came across town with 100 passengers and upward aboard. The first car was No. 5, second of the corner of Twenty-third-street and Broadway. Seven other cars soon followed, all equally packed, with only two poor horses to each. Messengers were sent to the depot stating that Mr. BUNGE had again blocked the road. Eventually the whole line was blocked. At Forty-third Police, from the Twenty-ninth Precinct Station, came to the help of Mr. BUNGE'S men. From 6 o'clock until nearly 9 the traffic was stopped. By this time the passengers had got tired of waiting, and large numbers had left the cars. Capt. BUNGE, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, came to the rescue, and after a great deal of difficulty and talk between passengers, drivers, conductors and the officers the blockade was raised. The door will be repeated every day. Mr. BUNGE'S officers say, until the Company make better arrangements for the better accommodation of these passengers and take more care of their horses.

It having been reported to the Society that great abuse of horse-flesh takes place on the occasion of picnics, along the Third-avenue and other lines, officers will be detailed on each of these occasions, and all be cars with over fifty or sixty passengers will be examined until extra cars and horses are supplied. One complainant reported that he had known 180 passengers to start from Harlem in one car, with only one pair of jaded horses.

Another "Accident" on the Erie Railway—Seven Cars Demolished.

A westward-bound freight train belonging to the Erie Railway Company ran off the track a short distance this side of the Bergen Tunnel at 2:45 P. M. yesterday. Happily no one was injured, though seven of the cars were wrecked. Travel on the Erie and the Hoboken and Hunter Roads was delayed until 10:5 P. M., at which time the wreck was

THE INDIAN COUNCIL.

Proceedings of the Grand Council—Origin of the Federal Movement—Characteristic Delays—Interesting Ceremonies of Reception—A Hungry Indian—A Mad Horse Speech.

From Our Special Correspondent.

OKMULGEE, Indian Territory, }
Friday, June 9, 1871. }

In my letter of Tuesday I promised in my next to give a report of the proceedings of the General Council. The main business to be transacted at this session is the provisional adoption of the constitution prepared at the December session, to provide for a form of federative government for all the tribes living in the Indian Territory. On adjourning last December, on the completion of this work, it was made the duty of "the Secretary of the General Council to transmit a duly authenticated copy of this constitution to the executive authority of each nation represented in the General Council, and to ask the acceptance and ratification of the same by the councils or people of the respective nations." An interval of six months was afforded to admit of the nations expressing their will upon the Constitution. But now when the General Council comes together again, it finds that, with the exception of the Creek nation, no action has been taken in the matter. The Cherokees have done nothing because the package mailed by the Secretary of the General Council to the Head Chief (or Governor) of that Indian had been abstracted from the mail, and only came to hand ten days before the meeting of the General Council. The Chickasaws have deferred the consideration of it until after their Assembly shall meet in August next. The Seminoles from an objection to the proposed basis of ministerial election, have indefinitely postponed acting upon it, and the small tribes have done nothing. Thus the General Council now meets to find itself in the same position it was last December, and as the large majority of delegates are desirous that some form of Government may be perfected, it was proposed in caucus by the more intelligent of them to adopt the constitution provisionally, and inaugurate a General Government so to confirmed or rejected by the national councils, when they hold their regular sessions. The mail facilities at this place are only weekly, and as the mail leaves early to-morrow, I have delayed writing this letter till this evening, as I was desirous to report some action upon this important matter. But five days of the session have passed, and the only approach to its consideration is the appointment of a committee of seven to devise some method in order to inaugurate as speedily as possible the form of Government provided for in the Constitution. This Committee made a lengthy report this afternoon, which was twice read and interpreted. But the consideration of it is deferred till to-morrow, when an animated and important debate will undoubtedly ensue.

Let me explain to your readers the manner of interpreting. In this General Council there are a number of delegates who speak English with the utmost fluency and purity, and there are also many who understand only their own Indian tongue. Delegations, where one or more of the members do not understand the proceedings, are provided with an interpreter each, and all verbal and written business has to be spoken or readily translated, so that the interpreters may render it into their native tongues. There are, perhaps, six interpreters, each seated in the midst of his delegation, and after an orator has delivered himself of a period, or the Secretary has read a clause of a resolution, a continued murmuring breaks out all over the hall, which has a similar sound to the responses in the Episcopal liturgy. As I wish to give some connected report of the proceedings of this Council, I will defer entering upon that subject until after hearing to-morrow's debate, believing that I can afford your readers more pleasure at this time in describing the ceremonial of an Indian reception which was enacted in the Council chamber this morning.

As Superintendent HOAG (the presiding officer of the Council) and your correspondent were about to leave our room this morning, to take our seats at the Council table, Major VORE, of this place, informed Mr. HOAG that some newly-arrived visitors from the Washita agency, consisting of Waco, Wichita, Caddo, Ke-chi and Ta-o-ai Chiefs, wished to confer with him. They were instantly invited into the apartment. Six Chieftians and an interpreter grotesquely attired entered. The Waco Chief, whose name my orthography is not equal to, first entered, wearing a field-officer's faded coat with a second-lieutenant's shoulder-straps, and carrying a tomahawk in his hand. All wore blankets and breech-cloths, their faces were besmeared with war paint, and their ears ornamented with pendants, some more than a foot long. When all were in the room, the Superintendent shook hands with the whole party in solemn silence, and arranged seats for five. Our supply of chairs would go no further. The two left without seats squatted on their heels against the wall. The talk then commenced.

SUPERINTENDENT, (to the interpreter)—Tell those chiefs that I am about to attend the Great Council of their civilized brethren, and wish them to be present at our talk. I am very pleased to see them, and am ready to hear what my red brethren have to say.

A long guttural monologue from the interpreter made these sentiments known to the warriors, which was responded to by approving grunts. The gentleman with the tomahawk then utter a confused noise, to which the interpreter gave intelligible expression by saying:

He says he wants beef—he is hungry. They give him bacon, and he can't eat it.

The Superintendent inquired of Major VORE if any beef had been killed in the village this morning, and was answered in the affirmative. Mr. HOAG then informed the party that he would see that provision was made for them. He further inquired whether any of the party had been appointed delegates to the Council, but no one could tell whether he held such an appointment or not, so the Superintendent with a neat little speech dismissed the party.

The General Council was opened at 9; prayer was made by the Indian chaplain and the roll called. Before any business was introduced, a Choctaw delegate named FOLSOM, reported to the chair that representatives from a number of tribes at the Wichita agency were here on invitation from the Council, and he moved that they be invited to seats. It was customary with those tribes, he explained, to be received, tribe by tribe, with a formal hand-shaking, and with a general smoking of the pipe of peace. He, therefore, moved further that a short recess be taken to admit of the performance of this ceremonial. The motion was adopted. Here a little difficulty arose about the conduct of the reception, as no one in the Council was acquainted with the precise etiquette to be observed. One delegate suggested that the Osages—who had not entered the Chamber yet—should be sent for to conduct the ceremonies, but it was at length decided that a Reception Committee of three be appointed to consult the interpreter, and arrange a plan of proceeding. Two Choctaw delegates, and OK-TAR-HAR-SARS-HARJO, a Creek delegate, were appointed on the Committee.

A massive pipe, or calumet, and tobacco were produced, and the seedy-looking visitors placed in a row on the east side of the hall. Benches were then arranged on the opposite side of the President to accommodate the members of the Council, this being on right. All present arose, and the visitors were informed through their interpreter that the Council was about to receive them with the ceremonies practised among their tribes. All their civilized red brothers would shake hands with them, and then smoke the pipe of peace together.

The reception commenced by first introducing the Creek delegation, each member passing along and shaking hands with the solemnity observable at a funeral. This was a breach of etiquette to the Cherokees, who on all occasions claim precedence, and OK-TAR-HAR-SARS-HARJO was afterward taken to task for it. One delegation after another extended the right hand of fellowship to their wild brethren, and the hand-shaking that prevailed would have done credit to a Presidential levee. The mode practised is for the person received to grasp his host by the right hand, and with his left to seize the muscle of the latter's left arm. Holding him at arm's length, a downward movement of both hands is made, and the pledge of friendship is given.

The five nations having shaken hands and resumed their seats, KECHUM and his son (Sad and Fox) came next in turn; and here a hitch ensued, the Osages refusing to come up. After an awkward interval of ten minutes, during which the WACO and his friends sat down, the Superintendent went to them to interpose his good offices. A young Choctaw whispered in my ear, "The Osages have got their backs up;" and, from the skilful finesse with which they listened to the Superintendent's counsel, I judged that something had ruffled them. In arranging for the reception ceremonies, the Osage delegation had been requested to change their seats, to make room for the new visitors. They had complied, but it was supposed to have touched their sense of dignity. A consultation was held among them after the Superintendent left, and, to the relief of all, the magnificent Osage delegation came up and shook hands with their poor friends.

Hand-shaking over, the pipe of peace was filled by Delegate FOLSOM, who proceeded to the WACO Chief, and having, with imposing solemnity, taken two or three whiffs himself, he then handed the mouth-piece to the latter. The pipe passed along the whole line of visitors, and was then carried to the first row of delegates, down which it slowly proceeded, and then returned up the second line. The bowl was immense, reminding me of a cohorn mortar I used to practice on during the war, but it had to be twice refilled to go all around.

Speech-making was next in order, our expectorated and sagacious friend, OK-TAR-HAR-SARS-HARJO, a very Nestor among the Creeks, undertaking the delivery of the welcoming address. The services of two interpreters were brought into requisition—one to translate Creek into English, and the second to turn English into Waco. Here is the substance of the address:

"We welcome you to the Grand Council of your civilized red brothers. The Indians you see here four years ago lived a great way east of here. They have not learned the habits of the White man, and, live in houses, and cultivate farms. It was the will of the Almighty that all should live together in this country. Before the white man's war, we used to see each other frequently; but now years pass along without our meeting. In former times the different tribes would get together and the old men talk to each other, but this is done no longer.

Our white brother extended to us the hand of peace, and we followed in his path and now are here. But your tribes, until lately, have been wandering on the plains. The white man wants to treat and has given the civilized Indians a large country to live in. We want you to come and take up homes with us. The privileges we have received are good, and we want you to come and share them. The Government of the United States has taken from the five nations their wandering life, and has given them their own land. The Government says that our red brothers living west and north must give up their lands there and come into this Territory, where vacant lands will be given them. In old times the Indians used to steal horses and kill white people, but this never did them any good. Now they must learn to live in peace, and raise their own food and horses. The Government at Washington has advised our brothers to give up their bad ways, and do as the Muskokees (Creeks) are doing. If they will do this they will be well treated. I am speaking to my brethren from the Wichita Agency, and also to all those tribes on the plains: all must leave their wandering life, and take up homes in the Territory, and this talk is not only good for the men, but it is good for the wives and for the little children, and for the generations to come hereafter. I wish my brothers to speak kind words to you while here, and all to love each other; so when you go home you may carry these kind feelings. Then you can live on the land given to you by the United States the Government will protect you here, and you can bring up your children in safety. Formerly tribes would fight each other and eat one another up, but now they see the evil of such ways, and Government has interfered to prevent it. In old times you had a large country to range in and could live each a life; there was plenty of game and this supported you. My people used to own a large extent of land, but it is now gone, and we are content to live on small farms. By following these old habits we could never gain strength or gain in numbers. Our Great Father's heart is good to follow the same way, and induce our brothers to do the same. When a man sees a very large object he knows he can't lift it; and, when we see all these thousands of white people filling up the whole country, we know we can't drive them away. Our Great Father at Washington loves all the Indians; he has given a home to this country to live in, and wants them to be happy here. He wants to have them live in peace with white men, and will see that the white men do not injure them. Our visitors have been received with all kindness by this Great Council, although not with all the ceremonies we intended to receive, and all this kind talk is intended for all our visitors. The pipes were received in the same way when they first came among us, and if our visitors will take up land with us and go to work, in a few years they will find all this talk prove true."

This sensible address was at first listened to by these wild men with the most absorbed attention, the impassibility of the Indian being forgotten in the surpassing interest of the sentiments addressed to them, frequent and emphatic grunts from several of the chiefs expressing their approval of what they heard. But our cordial friend, OK-TAR-HAR-SARS-HARJO, in his desire to produce a lasting impression for good upon his besmeared neophytes, spun out his wise counsel so intolerably long, that it grew tedious, and as a gentle hint that they had been advised enough, three of his little children in the faith got up and left. But OK-TAR-HAR-SARS-HARJO was not weary in well doing. He continued his reception speech through two mortal hours, until there was some danger of the WACO chief and his friends springing up and whacking their guide, philosopher and friend, as an intolerable bore.

The Creek orator having taken his seat, the Superintendent rose to assure his red friends that the words they had just heard were true words. He would now talk a little about their Great Father. Their Great Father had bought of the Cherokees, the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, the western half of their land. The Great Father was their true friend; he wanted them and their brothers on the plains to come into the Territory and have comfortable homes, as their civilized brothers had. Their Great Father wanted them to do this because by hunting the buffalo they would never grow rich, or wise, or powerful. If they would follow in the path of their brethren, they could have warm, dry homes, where their wives and their children, and their sick ones, could be made comfortable. While they continued to steal and kill the whites their Great Father gave them up to the white soldiers, and while they were in the hands of the soldiers their friends here could not help them. If, on the contrary, they would come here to take up their homes, their red brethren could assist and instruct them, and their Great Father would give them tools to build their houses, and seed to raise their food, and build schools where their children could be instructed. On the formal announcement that the talk was over, an emphatic grunt of relief escaped from all, and the reception came to an end. INDIAN.

Inner History of the Fall of the City—A Faithful Official and his Good Work.

Paris June 6 Correspondence of the London Times.

The papers have related how a M. CLEMENT, whose name was afterwards found to be DURANEL, led the army into Auteuil by the St. Cloud Gate. Without, however, being altogether incorrect, the account of it is not complete, and does not fully explain the events which preceded and followed the honorable action of this brave citizen.

M. DURANEL was overseer of roads and bridges in the service of M. ALPHAND, chief engineer of the works for the embellishment of the town, and under this name has for a long time been in charge of the works about Auteuil and Passy. M. DURANEL, who was formerly a naval commissionned officer of marines, is a man of rare energy. Instead of allowing himself to be carried away by the stream of emigration, he never left off communicating with his chief, who was at Versailles. Being gifted with superior talents, he was able to commit to memory the fortifications erected by the insurgents, made plans of them and took them to M. ALPHAND, who submitted them to the Chief of the Executive Power. He went on with this till the works being sufficiently advanced, he felt that the hour had come when it would be possible to do more active service. When the time seemed near he was put in direct communication with the military authorities, and more especially with Gen. DOUAY, Commander-in-Chief of the Fourth Corps, which was encamped at Villeneuve l'Etang and Marne, and was to enter Paris by Passy and Auteuil. After several attempts DURANEL signaled that the ramparts were abandoned, and that the confusion in the army of the Party of Disorder was growing. The more and more energetic leaders who succeeded each other in the command did not long leave this part of the enceinte undefended; but when the batteries of Montretout had destroyed all the houses which skirt the ramparts at the back, and the St. Cloud Gate was in ruins, its defense had become impracticable. It had been almost abandoned for two days, and the Federal soldiers had taken up their post at the foot of the heights of Passy. When M. ALPHAND told me he saw that all the defenders of the Commune had disappeared on that side, or, at least, that their numbers were insignificant. This was on Sunday, the 21st of May. At any cost it was necessary to inform the commander of the Fourth Corps what was the state of affairs. M. DURANEL could only get at the General by going through St. Denis; so he started for the Chemin de Fer du Nord. It was about 2 in the afternoon. Thinking over the precious time he was losing while going this roundabout way, he was seized with fear lest the Communists should occupy the ramparts. He ordered the coachman to turn round, and alighted as near as possible to the St. Cloud Gate. He was intimately acquainted with all this part of Paris, and was able to avoid the posts of the insurgents, and evade the vigilance of the citizens placed in the houses. The bolder citizens had ranged themselves where the shells from Montretout were falling ceaselessly. Braving this danger, he mounted the salient angle of the bastion, waving his white handkerchief. About fifty yards from the glacis, lying flat on their faces, concealed in the grass, were thirty sailors commanded by Commander ——, who had received orders and were permanently established there, ready at any moment to avail themselves of an opportunity. The officer heard DURANEL calling him; he raised his head carefully. A voice called out, "There is no one left, come on quickly." The officer, fearing some new treachery, answered, "Come on yourself." DURANEL immediately ran to the gate. The bridges were broken down, and to pass appeared impossible. Making use, however, of some fragments of beams, DURANEL contrived to cross the ditch. He informed the officer of the state of affairs, but the latter, still on his guard, had him conducted under a close escort to Gen. DOUAY, who had received notice by telegraph, and had set out, soon followed by BERTHAUT'S and L'HERILLIER'S divisions.

The meeting between DURANEL and the General was at Billancourt. Whatever confidence Gen. DOUAY may have had in M. ALPHAND'S letter, it is probable that if his troops met with a serious resistance in their entry he would blow his brains out. In the meantime 800 men had been hastily got together. Thirty sailors marched in front; a body of sappers had hurriedly placed planks across the ditch. BERTAUT'S division followed immediately. It was about 4 o'clock in the evening. The Federal post fled, firing the muskets, and some weak battalions advanced to resist; but the movement had been so sudden that they were surrounded or dispersed and at 7 o'clock the two first divisions already held Upper and Lower Passy, threatening the Trocadero. After this position could be gained the insurrection was crushed. It was to be feared that the alarm being given, considerable forces would be met there. It was necessary to make sure. DURANEL again undertook this perilous mission. He made his way across the little streets to the terraces, and reached safely to say that all the troops might advance. As before, Gen. DOUAY warned him that he would blow his brains out if compelled to retreat. DURANEL did not hesitate, although the Commune might have rallied and returned to the attack during the march. He was ready to go into the city, and indeed the 4th and later the Fourth Corps occupied the terraces which command the Trocadéro, and established themselves strongly, ready the next day to take the Arc de l'Etoile, the Pare Monceau, the Faubourg St. Honoré and the St. Lazare Railway Station. They had surprised the insurgents in the houses and behind their barricades, without the latter being able to do any material harm to the troops.

There is no doubt that the army would have entered Paris easily without DURANEL'S courageous act, but it would have entered after a breach had been made, and three days later. It is impossible to calculate what disasters three days of delay might have entailed on the city of Paris. Now that it is known what preparations had been made for setting fire to whole districts and all the public buildings, one trembles to think that one shot from an insurgent gun might have stopped the non-commissioned officer before he had reached the gate by which the first troops of Versailles were to enter Paris. These details, which rectify and complete those which have been already published, will be useful for the purposes of history.

MODERN REVOLUTION.

Archbishop Manning on the Republics of the Day.

Archbishop MANNING had delivered a lecture at the Hanover-square Rooms to the young men of the Catholic Association on "Modern Revolution." The Archbishop began by saying that he wished to distinguish between revolution as it was formerly known, and as it would be, as he thought, known hereafter. Some of the Communists had quoted the Lord Jesus as the first Communist, and had parodied the Christian truths. There were numberless instances to show that in the early ages Christianity was destroying the greatest of all bondages save that of sin—namely, the slavery of one man under another. The perpetual cuckoo cry of liberty, equality and fraternity had become the most profane parody on things sacred. Through the long history of Europe we had had perpetual revolutions, but these were in general changes of the persons governing. There were some other changes—namely, of the form of Government; but there were through all the recognition of some paramount authority as necessary for the existence of human society. But now the recognition of this authority had become fainter and fainter, until the authority of the mass, counted by the number of heads, was now set forth as the only true form. He was not going to argue that democracy was bad in itself for any country, but he had shown that it was the form best calculated to promote the happiness, the progress, and the freedom of man. There had been successful Republics in the Middle Ages, but they were Christian and they were Catholic. Modern Republics, as before, were without faith. Religion must be excluded, and in eliminating this they also eliminated Christian morality. Atheism, materialism, and a negation of all religion was the commencement of the programme of the Commune. The Archbishop read descriptions of the Commune from the pens of Mr. FREEMAN and MAZZINI, the latter writer declaring that a forgetfulness of God must destroy France and produce in her stead a constant recurrence of civil war. After reading some important extracts, Archbishop MANNING concluded by saying it was the bond of liberty, fraternity and equality, and there were to be found in households as well as in society, but nothing was said of authority or of obedience, which were also to be found in households, and without which neither they nor society could exist. In the principles of '89 he could not find a trace of unity in God. The Apostle had given the true theory of society when he said, "Let every soul be obedient to the higher powers, for the powers that be are ordained of God." Where the law existed, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," there were liberty, equality and fraternity; but where the love of God was lost the love of our neighbor could not survive, and, therefore, the love of God was a necessity to human society. The modern theories were like the pollarding of an oak; they cut off the foliage and the fruit and the splendor of the tree, and the stock remaining was human nature deprived of all its personations. Under the protection of authority, of law, and of obedience, the fine graces of a Christian character consolidated the welfare of the people.

AUSTRIA.

The Emperor and His Parliament.

The Vienna correspondent of the Eastern Budget says, writing on the 3d instant: "Yesterday the Emperor gave the following answer to the address of the Reichsrath, declaring that they have no confidence in the present Ministry: 'I accept with satisfaction the assurance of your patriotism and of the old Austrian loyalty which the representative House of the Reichsrath expresses toward my person. I fully share the conviction of the necessity of ending the struggle relative to the forms of the Constitution, and I trust that by Government and Parliament being supported by my entire confidence and the desire for a secure and settled state of affairs which has already taken possession of all classes of the people, in putting an end to the constantly recurring crises in a constitutional manner and preserving Austria from new conflicts. In the expectation that the representative House of the Reichsrath will co-operate in this work, I give it my Imperial greeting." This reply is generally regarded as sealing the fate of the present Parliament, for it states in the most positive manner that the Sovereign's confidences in his advisers is unbroken. Yet it must not be understood as showing any desire on the part of the Emperor so prepare a triumph for the Ministry at the expense of the representatives; all that is meant is that he adheres to the principle of placing all the nationalities of the Empire on an entirely equal political footing. His decision is now in favor of this or that Minister, but it's political principle which the present German majority in the Reichsrath either would not or could not carry out. The question now is, what is the next step to be taken by the Opposition? Its organs say to-day that the majority of the House, to be logical, must now refuse to vote the supplies. The next sitting takes place on Tuesday, when this important question will be decided. Meanwhile the Ministry seems to be prepared for every eventuality. It will not neglect to make the greatest possible use of all the advantages which arise from its defensive position to overcome the Centralist Party, and it is inferred from the firm and confident terms of the Emperor's reply that the Czechs will not this time refuse to assist the Government. Count HOHENWART had repeated conferences this week with the Czech leaders, and speaks hopefully of the result. As for the Poles, the Ministry is assured of their unconditional support."

HELIGOLAND.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes: "I see the Heligoland question has turned up again, and a few words of description may not be without interest to your readers, for there is no place like it on the face of the earth. It is a tall red hill, rising straight out of the waters, with a sand-bank on one side. On the sand, and part of the way up the hill, is the town, or rather village. It was inhabited in former times by pilots and wreckers, but now they have degenerated into lodging-house keepers. Heligoland is the Margate of Hamburg. Thither stream the citizens of that rich city to gamble at rouge-et-noir, (at least, they did when I was there,) and to enjoy sea bathing. There is a regular season in the Summer months, and sometimes many passengers that are brought over the steamer are obliged to sleep on board, and to go back again—the island being full. Every house probably takes in lodgers; but then there are not very many houses. The bathers resort to a breakwater sand-bank, a spit of land, which the Governor, it will be remembered, some time ago stocked with rabbits, which began eating up the grass that held the sand-bank together, so that the Heligolanders became furious and talked of shaking off the English yoke. However, the rabbits were all shot, and the islanders were pacified, and nothing more was said of the old Prussian Government. Their behaviour to Germans, they detest that nation more even than they do ourselves. They are not Dig Heb, though they are English subjects; they are not German, though they speak German. They are Heligolanders, the noblest of created beings; all foreigners and alii, which, in their homely dialect, means all but themselves. The island hill is flat, and, as well as I can remember, about the size of the Green Park. There is a well-known story of a man from the Far West—and therefore accustomed to see land only on a large scale—who paid a visit to England, and when asked how he enjoyed himself, he replied very much, only he never went out at night for fear of falling off. In Heligoland there is really a danger of such an accident happening to any one who, from the force of habit, should continue to walk too long in any one direction."

BRAZIL.

Summary of the Provisions of the New Slave Bill—Sentiment as to its Expediency.

From the Anglo-Brazilian Times, May 24.

The bill for the gradual extinction of slavery, which has been introduced into the Chamber of Deputies by His Excellency the Minister of Agriculture, is undubitably a satisfactory fulfillment of the promise made only nine days previously in the Emperor's speech. In fact, it has taken even advanced emancipationists members of the House by surprise, and we hear murmurs of discontent at the latitude of the measure from men who last session were among the most earnest urgers of legislative action for the settlement of the slave question. But it is to be hoped that, though startled for the moment by the proposition and elaboration of the various partial measures which were promoted in the preceding session, all those who fought so bravely for the cause of the slave while it yet lay in the blighting shade of Ministerial opposition, will not be found wanting when the moment for action has at last arrived—but will give their powerful aid to carry, substantially at the least, the comprehensive measure which the Cabinet of the Visconde do Rio Branco has put forward for the consideration of the Legislature in the present session. A perusal of this bill will show that the key-notes of its provisions for the gradual extinction of slavery are two—the establishment of the principle of free birth, as regards future generations; facilities for obtaining liberty, as regards the existing generations. And as relates to the vested interest affected by the first, limited compensation.

By the benefit of the future generations who, under the existing laws, would be brought forth to slavery, the bill declares that all children born of slaves after its date shall be held in all respects as though born of free mothers, save that they may be made to serve an apprenticeship until their twenty-first year. For the benefit of the existing generations the bill grants to all slaves the precious rights to hold and inherit property, and to obtain liberation peremptorily on tender of the amount of official valuation; each a most important privilege in itself, and which, conjoined, will operate rapidly in extinguishing slavery in the towns.

Besides these indirect measures, there are many other accessory and complementary ones for the protection of freedom, such as the ex-officio advocacy of the public prosecutors, the summonsment of suits, the guardianship and primary jurisdiction of the Orphan Courts, the encouragement of commutations of slavery by free service for not over seven years, and the exemption of all liberations from tax and every expense.

Added to the indirect measures for the advantage of the existing generation of slaves, the bill provides for the immediate freeing of all the slaves of the nation, and of the manumitted slaves of the Crown, for the proximate liberation of all monastic slaves, for annual emancipations by a fund formed of the taxes on the possession and transmission of slaves, of the profits of lotteries, of fines, and of other aids to the accumulation, and, for deeming slaves free under specified circumstances, including all slaves not registered by a certain time.

The compensation of the owners of the slave mothers, to whom the bill assigns the care of the free-born children up to their eighth year, is their gratuitous services until twenty-one years of age; or, as the option, $36 annually during thirty years for each child attaining eight years. In the last case the minor is to be at the disposition of the State, but a part of his wages will be paid to him on arriving at majority. The cost to the State for compensation, and for carrying out the provisions of the law, is estimated by the Government at a maximum of $600,000 annually, as the great majority of the planters will naturally opiate for compensation by service.

The bill makes no special provision for the education of the apprentices, but for seven years their interests will not be affected by the omission, and, undoubtedly, in the expected revision of the laws on public education their case will be considered. Such are the principal provisions of the notable bill with which the Cabinet proposes to solve the problem of extinguishing slavery, without precipitation or excessive injury to vested rights and the prosperity of the country. In dealing with a question of such magnitude, one which goes to the very groundwork of Brazilian society, it is impossible to avoid inflicting some injury on the numerous interests involved, and we must expect loud reclamations, and even cries of alarm, against the extent given to the measures for liberation.

But there will also be a clamor of a different nature, especially from abroad, one against the narrowness and insufficiency of the bill, from those who judge the "higher law" should supersede all other considerations. But the legislator cannot thus leave out of sight the questions of prudence, of opportunity, of power. To those with whom questions of expedience have weight, and who know that the very existence of Brazilian society yet rests upon the labor of its 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 slaves, the bill will appear a measure of a very liberal character. And it must be remembered that the effects are not to be measured by the mere letter of the law, for Brazilian benevolence has already given proofs that in dealing with slavery its action will be of great importance, and every year will intensify the action and increase its reach. In fact, leaving to the efforts of the provisions of the bill, and to the best of private benevolence, we may assume that not a single slave will tread on the soil of free Brazil.

BILLIARDS.

The Match for the Diamond Cue—Melvin Foster Madly Beaten by Cyrille Dion.

The billiard match for the diamond cue and $1,000, between CYRILLE DION, of New-York, champion, and MELVIN FOSTER, of Norwich, Conn., was played at the Hippotheatron, in Fourteenth-street, last evening. The game was 1,500 points up, four-ball carom—each carom counting three. Capt. J. E. BOYLE was chosen umpire for FOSTER, and NEIL BRYANT for DION. Mr. FLUNKETT, of Philadelphia, was agreed on for referee. DION won the game choice. DION won the lead and compelled FOSTER to play first shot.

THE ERIE LITIGATION.

Close of the Case of Heath and Raphael—A New Bill Filed on the Part of the Defense.

The case of HEATH and RAPHAEL, the English stockholders of the Erie Railway Company, against FISK, GOULD and LANE, for alleged mis-appropriation of 50,054 shares of stock, was to be resumed yesterday before KENNETH G. WHITE, Master in Equity, but in the absence of Mr. SWAN, the witness for the defense, it was adjourned until this day. The defense will conclude in a day, and the Master's report will then be submitted to Judge BLATCHFORD in the District Court. JAMES FISK, Jr., has filed a bill, in which, after some general preliminary remarks, he denies that any of the defendants at any time procured or accomplished their election or the election of any other person or persons as directors or officers of the Erie Railroad by any improper means. He admits, however, that although he "did obtain part of the votes which were cast for him at the election of directors, in October, 1867, by the purchase of proxies for voting, and by purchasing or inducing his friends to purchase shares of stock in the Erie Railroad Company, which were registered in the name of this defendant, or of his friends, before the closing of the transfer-books preparatory to the election, the certificates of which stock were in part sold by him shortly afterward, and after the transfer-books had closed, yet a large part of the stock, by votes upon which this defendant and the defendants GOULD and LANE were elected, was held and owned continuously by the persons who voted in person or by proxies for the said three defendants, and the certificates thereof were not parted with by such persons until a long time after the election; and such persons were in every sense bona fide owners and holders of the stock so voted upon. At the said election in October, 1867, there were only two rival tickets for directors voted upon, and the purchase of proxies for the election of the said two tickets, respectively, by persons intending to vote a particular ticket at such election, who immediately parted with the certificates issued to them, and all the other acts, proceedings and methods charged in the bill of complaint, to have been resorted to by the said defendants in the election of the directors of the company, for the purpose of controlling the said election, were resorted to in an equal degree by the persons who were candidates for election upon the rival ticket, and by its supporters, and such methods have been constantly resorted to for many years by persons desiring to control or retain the control of the Erie Railroad Company, and of other large corporations, without objection or complaint on the part of any person; and such proceedings, so far as the Erie Railroad Company was concerned, were taken and allowed under the advice of counsel; and upon the presentation of a former election of directors of the Erie Railroad Company, the officers of that Company obtained an opinion in writing to the effect that the charter of that Company stood upon the transfer-books thirty days prior to an election, to vote for directors at such election, notwithstanding any persons might have sold and parted with the certificates of stock before the election took place." The opinion of Messrs. EVARTS and SOUTHMAYD, appended, to the one referred to. With reference to the coming election of directors of the Erie Railroad Company, an opinion is asked as to whether the said transfer-books, in whose name such stock stands upon the books, can be deprived of his vote upon it by production to the inspectors of evidence that since the closing of the transfer-books he has sold the stock, and delivered to the purchaser both certificates, with an irrevocable power of transfer, will give them no authority to reject his vote upon it.

The bill goes on to state that when these charges, made by HEATH and RAPHAEL against FISK, GOULD and LANE, were made known to the director of the Erie Railway Company, a committee was appointed to investigate them, and, if statements to be correct, to aid HEATH and RAPHAEL in their prosecution. The several charges contained in the bill of HEATH and RAPHAEL, as already published, were referred to in detail, and, after an exhaustive investigation, the Committee was compelled to report that no evidence appeared to maintain the allegations, and that there was no ground for complaint on the part of the shareholders in the name of the Erie Railroad Company. That in the acts of these gentlemen they have sought to promote its interests and to enlarge its business, and that there is good prospect for the success of the Company under the present administration of its affairs. The Committee, therefore, acquit Messrs. GOULD, FISK and LANE of any evil intent in the administration of the Company's business; but, as may be inferred, the affairs of the Company have not always been managed in such a manner as would have commended itself to the judgement of all your Committee as entirely discreet. Appended was a vote of confidence passed to Messrs. FISK, GOULD and LANE by the Directors of the Company since this proceeding was instituted.

Bills substantially the same have been filed against GOULD, LANE and the Erie Railroad Company.

The St. Stephen's College Regatta.

On Saturday last the Hard Boat Club of St. Stephen's College, at Annandale, N. Y., held its third annual race, for which the two six-oared boats Rosalie and Miramonde were entered. The crews consisted of Second Lieut. Gibson, stroke; A. W. Gilkeson, No. 1; W. W. Mance, No. 2; G. O. O'Reilly, No. 3; T. R. Kent, No. 4; J. B. Wasson, No. 5, of the Rosalie with Mr. O. P. Vinton for their coxswain; and of the Miramonde, First Lieut. Drane, stroke; J. S. Moody, No. 1; W. J. Smith, No. 2; A. B. Perry, No. 3; A. J. Brockway, No. 4; C. J. P. Brokliebank, No. 5, with H. A. Fairbairn as their coxswain. Both crews seemed to be well matched, and, from all we could hear, were in good training. The Rosalie won the toss and took the inside track. After very little trouble they started off, the Rosalie gaining in the first fifteen strokes a half boat's length, keeping it up well until they were half way round the turning stake, when the two boats were even. After the two were round the stakes the Miramonde was half a boat's length ahead, and finally came in a boat and a quarter ahead of the Rosalie. The time of the winning boat was 8 minutes and 30 seconds, and of the Rosalie's minutes and 40 seconds, the course being a mile and three-quarters.

After the race there was a tub race, participated in by Messrs. GIBSON, HANCE, PEMBERTON and CLAYTON, in which Mr. HANCE came in first, the last two gentlemen capsizing. The Hard Boat Club was organized in 1864 by the gift from JOHN BARD of the Annandale. In 1868 the members raised among themselves and friends sufficient money to purchase the two boats used in the race, and to put up the fine boat-house, which they use conjointly with the lady to whose property it stands. This year the Club received from Dr. HOUGHTON, of Poughkeepsie, the gift of a fine cedar shell, from which the Cayuga ordered and viewed the race. Although forbidden by college authorities from entering in competition with other colleges, the Club numbers thirty-six members and evinces the greatest prosperity.

The Decree in Favor of Mrs. Gaines.

The following is the decree of the United States Circuit Court, Justice BRADLEY presiding, in the case of Mrs. MYRA CLARK GAINES against the City of New-Orleans: "This cause came on further to be heard upon the exceptions to the Master's report, made under the decree in this cause, as entered in this Court on the 11th day of June, 1870, against the said City of New-Orleans, and the same was argued by counsel, and thereupon, on consideration thereof,

It was ordered, adjudged and decreed that the Master's report on the basis of $230,326 89 for the net rents and profits, considering all improvements as compensated for by the needless and advantageous of the drainage-machine, be confirmed and approved, and setting off all other profits decreed by the City of New-Orleans from the drainage-machine against the cost of construction and repairs made by the city. It is therefore ordered that the complainant MYRA CLARK GAINES, is entitled to recover, and have—and she is hereby decreed to recover, and have—from the said City of New-Orleans, for the said net rents, profits and revenues of the said property, ordered by the decree of this Court to belong to, and to be delivered to her, the said complainant, the sum of $196,326 19 for the period said property has been in the possession of said City of New-Orleans, with five per cent. per annum interest on $64,000, from the date named in said Master's Report, to wit: the 1st of November, 1870, until paid; and that the said City of New-Orleans pay the costs of suit; and that a writ of execution issued in the form used in the Criminal Court in suits at common law in actions of assumpsit.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

No business was transacted at the Exchange yesterday, (June 19,) although there was a goodly attendance of those interested in real estate present during the day, and the market was generally discussed. The suburban auctions held were those respectively under the direction of JOHNSON & MILLER and WYCKOFF & LITTLE, at Vanderbilt Landing, Staten Island, and at Valley Stream, Long Island; as to the results of which a report will be made to-morrow. Today several auctions involving the disposition of City real estate will occur at the Exchange, but the principal event in real estate will be the sale of the Oakland property, on the line of the Central Railway of New-Jersey, conducted by A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BRO., O. H. PIERSON, auctioneer. The proposed auction is one of special importance, and is should be attended with a sale of a class which characterized the recent transactions in Rutherford Park lots, conducted by the same firm. The land offered lies well, has been greatly improved and is intrinsically valuable. The sale will begin today, on the ground, at 1½ P. M., and will be continued through to-morrow and Thursday. Special trains at 9 o'clock each day, for which tickets can be procured, and also descriptive maps of the property, of the auctioneers, No. 6 Pine-street.

On Saturday, June 17, at Mamaroneck, Westchester County, as a Sheriff's sale, S. DEGEN & Co. disposed of the property as advertised for that day, known as the "Harrod Place," embracing twenty-nine acres of land with buildings thereon, heretofore described, for $20,750—a very low figure. Purchased by JOHN FALCONER. A wood lot, in extent one acre, was also sold by the same firm to ELISHA HAIGHT for $60.

By authority of the Board of Directors of THE NEW-YORK RAILWAY COMPANY, and in conformity with the terms of the act of incorporation in that respect, the undersigned, Commissioners on Stock Subscriptions, give public notice for and on behalf of the directors of such Company, that books of subscription for the capital stock thereof will be opened on WEDNESDAY, the 28th day of June, inst., at the following places in this City, viz.:
At the banking-house of the DUNCAN, SHERMAN & CO., No. 11 Nassau-st.
At the banking-house of the BANK OF THE METROPOLIS, No. 31 Union-square.
The Company is authorized to construct two viaduct railways or branches through the City of New-York, on the east and west sides thereof, from a common starting-point at or near Chambers-st., between Broadway and Chatham-st.; also across the Harlem River and through Westchester County; with power to build additional lines of railway or branches, from time to time, in any part of the City or Westchester County. The property acquired by the Company is exempted from taxes and assessments during the period allowed for the final completion of the railway in the City. The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of New-York are authorized and directed, with the approval of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, to subscribe for five millions of dollars of the stock of the Company, whenever one million of dollars thereof has been subscribed for by private parties. This conditional amount of stock has been wholly subscribed for and taken by the directors of the Company. On the completion of either of the lines of railway to the line of Westchester County, the Supervisors of that county are authorized to issue the bonds of the county to such amount as the Supervisors shall deem expedient, to aid in the construction and extension of the railway to and through that county. For the proper consolidation of the interest of shareholders who may subscribe and pay in moneys at different times, the directors are authorized to issue scrip for interest on such payments, payable out of the earnings.
The terms of subscription will be as follows:
TEN per cent of the amount of stock subscribed for to be paid in cash at the time of subscription. The residue to be paid as called for by the Board of Directors upon notice of thirty days, but no call at any one time to exceed ten per cent.
Scrip for interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum will be issued by the Company, payable out of the first earnings of the railway on all installments paid on stock subscribed for within thirty days after the subscription books shall be opened.
The Company reserves the right to close the subscription books at any time after the 28th day of July, 1871.

THE METHODIST TRIAL.

Third Day's Proceedings Before the Book Committee.

Testimony of Dr. Lanahan, Judge Reynolds, and Others—How the Books Were Repeatedly Refused—History of the Affidavit—Startling Statement by the Defendant.

At the opening of yesterday's session of the Court on Dr. LANAHAN'S trial, Judge REYNOLDS rose and said that, at the suggestion of a number of the Committee, he had called on Dr. CARLTON after the close of the previous day's session, and asked him to let them take the books into the little side room off of the Agent's office, with doors open and without oversight. Dr. CARLTON said that, as he construed the order passed by the Committee on the previous day, that could not be permitted without the oversight of Mr. GRANT, the book-keeper. Judge REYNOLDS referred to the letter from Mr. GOODENOUGH, which was in the hand of the Chairman for reading, saying that if Mr. GOODENOUGH was in private communication with the Committee, or if the counsel on the other side was handing in papers secretly to the Committee, Dr. LANAHAN'S counsel wanted to know it. Gen. RUNYON repelled the insinuation that the counsel had taken any surreptitious action. The Chairman thought the letter might be read, but as numerous objections were made, he merely announced that such a letter was in his hands. The letter is Mr. GOODENOUGH'S defense against the charges of Dr. LANAHAN.

THE ACCOUNTANT'S STORY.

EDWARD H. GEOGHEGAN was put on the stand. He said I am an accountant by profession, and was employed by Dr. LANAHAN in examining papers with reference to his trial in January last; I examined the books in a small room on the lower floor of the book-rooms; I applied to Mr. GRANT for the books I wanted from time to time, and he allowed me to take them into that room as I wanted them; I applied to Mr. GRANT for some books on the afternoon of the 17th or 18th of January; I told him I wanted the check-book, cash-book, and bank-books, to continue my examination; he said that he spoke to Mr. DUNLAP, who had charge of the books, and came back and said that as Dr. CARLTON was not there he could do nothing till next morning; next morning I found Mr. GRANT and Dr. CARLTON in Dr. CARLTON'S office together, and for Dr. LANAHAN until I could not have the books, for Dr. LANAHAN had already had sufficient time for his examination.

Cross-examined by Mr. FANCHER.—I reported to Dr. LANAHAN with the results of my examination dated about the 18th or 19th of January, I think; it was signed with my name and that of DELAFIELD & APPEL; I do not remember whether or not I started the paper before I made this application for the books.

Mr. FANCHER.—Was your demand on Dr. CARLTON to examine the books or to take the books from the room?

Mr. GOODENOUGH.—It was to take them into the private room there to examine the examination; I know Mr. APPEL'S office in Washington was a responsible one, because a single account I adjusted with him there amounted to $28,000; APPEL was employed there several years, but is not now; I am the person who made the affidavit in the mandamus proceeding.

JUDGE REYNOLDS ON THE STAND.

Ex-Judge REYNOLDS, of counsel for Dr. LANAHAN, next gave his testimony. I was said he, one of the counsel for Dr. LANAHAN in his trial before the Book Committee in January last; on motion of Gen. RUNYON, I forget which day, I reported to Dr. LANAHAN in the small room of the Agent's office, saying that he had asked Dr. CARLTON for access to some of the books and had been denied; I went and told Dr. CARLTON that the examination was not completed, and the accountant wanted certain books which he had not yet seen; I specified the books I wanted; I may have said I wanted them for some years back; Dr. CARLTON replied with excitement and great positiveness that "Dr. LANAHAN had been long enough examining those books, and that he would not let us have any more of them, as the examination had gone far enough;" we made no further attempt at that time to get the books, and as the trial was discontinued soon afterward, nothing said; I was present in the committee-room while the trial was going on with Bishops AMES and SIMPSON, Gen. RUNYON and Gen. MOORE, I think, and Mr. FANCHER and others; I left before they took action; I learned after I returned that the Committee had acted favorably on my applications; I then brought Mr. WATSON to the Concern, and told Dr. CARLTON I now wished to begin my examination; he referred me to Mr. GRANT; and I gave a receipt to Mr. GRANT for the papers of the Book Committee; a week before the adjournment of the Committee in January, I told the accountant I wished him to refer to some information in the bank-books and check-books; he delayed, saying that as soon as he brought the question to the desired point he would apply for them.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

After the recess Dr. LANAHAN resumed: Mr. GOUGHS informed me that he had made the application to Mr. GRANT and afterward to Dr. CARLTON, and was refused by both. I should have stated that on the day of my first interview with Dr. CARLTON, Mr. FANCHER referred to the resolution of the Book Committee, and said that I was thereby prohibited from the books. I said they had no authority to deprive me of access to the books and accounts of the house. The Committee were acting under the authority of the General Conference, and so was I. Mr. FANCHER also stated that in my speech at Baltimore I misrepresented him. I said I only said what I had heard from the Committee. He said I told a falsehood. I thanked him for his courtesy.

THE REFUSALS CORROBORATED.

Dr. LANAHAN then stated that Mr. GOUGHS and Judge REYNOLDS had reported to him at the respective times, the refusals of Dr. CARLTON to admit them to the books. He made no further attempt to get the books in January, as he had reason to suppose that the Goodenough case would be abandoned. His reasons was to be found in the statement of Judge REYNOLDS. Hearing that witnesses were subpœnaed by Mr. GOODENOUGH, proceeded the witness, I concluded as the trial was going on to resume my examination; in an interview with Dr. CARLTON, I told him that when the trial before the Book Committee was abandoned I supposed the Goodenough case would be given up; since it had not been I must recommence my work; Dr. CARLTON asked me, "What do you want with the check-books?" I told him I wished to examine them; he said I could not have them; I said, "Dr. CARLTON, this suit is your suit, as the charges was tried on very your charges;" he said it was not so; I told Mr. VANDERPOEL to apply for an order, and asked him when the suit would come on; I told him I did not want the case put off; I wrote to Mr. G. STERLING SMITH asking him to get up an application based upon the ground of my rights as a corporator, and the basis of the Goodenough suit; when I read the affidavit I observed that the application was not to the Superior Court in which the suit was; he said by Mr. VANDERPOEL'S authority that the Supreme Court only had jurisdiction; I remarked that the Goodenough case was not named; he said GOODENOUGH was not in possession of the books, and it would weaken the paper to mention him; the order was made and served on Dr. CARLTON; a day or two after it was served. I asked Dr. CARLTON if I had been rightly informed that he was trying to get the Book Committee to meet; he said yes; I told him there was no necessity for such a meeting, for if he would give me access to the books civil proceedings would be stopped at once; he refused to permit me to see them; when I afterward said to Dr. CARLTON that the charges before the Committee were his, he denied that he had seen them before they were printed, and I told him that they contained matter which only he could have furnished.

THE THING IN A NUT-SHELL.

Now, said I, Doctor, stop your suit or give me access to the books and this trouble will be over. He again refused to give me the books, and declined to hear my interest in the suit. He afterward said the Goodenough suit was an after-thought in my application. I thanked him for the remark, which I did not care to reply to.

Judge REYNOLDS.—Was the pendency of the Goodenough case the reason of your anxiety to see the books? A.—It was.

Q.—Did you consider that you had a right to the books? A.—Certainly.

Dr. LANAHAN then testified as to his duties in the Book Concern, stating that his salary had been $4,500 a year. His counsel then took up a line of questioning to show that he had been obstructed in the performance of his duties as an officer in the Concern, but it was ruled out as irrelevant. When asked what reason he had for thinking that the bank-books and check-books would help him in the Goodenough case, he said: I learned that oil companies had been organized in the Book Concern, and held meetings here at the old place, of which Mr. GOODENOUGH and Dr. CARLTON were officers. And there were records on the books giving me reason to believe that funds of the house were used for improper purposes. I ascertained to my satisfaction that Mr. GOODENOUGH had received in a year more than $2,000, the proper amount of his salary. There are hundreds of thousands of dollars entered on the cash-book in the form of notes, which do not appear on the bill book. This in itself is a very singular thing.

Dr. LANAHAN'S counsel announced that by the ruling of the chair on the first day of the trial, the time had arrived for the introduction of the official papers and other testimony ruled out at the commencement of the trial. The Western Christian Advocate was then introduced to illustrate the way in which the Quarterly papers blackened Dr. LANAHAN'S character. The chair ruled out as evidence. An appeal was taken with the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Woodruff, Cleveland, Bingham, Erwin, Rawlins, Blaker, Brooks, Moore. Nays—Messrs. Pike, Slicer, Maltby, Kennedy, Bannister, Vernon, Rothweiler. The Court then went into executive session on the subject of narrowing down the trial to the affidavit, or extending it to take in the alleged frauds and the Goodenough case. Their deliberations will be continued this morning up to the time of the trial, when the results of the deliberations will appear.

Police Affairs—Trials and Dismissals of Patrolmen.

Forty-two patrolmen were arraigned before Commissioner BOSWORTH, yesterday, and some of the cases were of a very serious character. Patrolman EDWARD MALONY, of the Fourth Precinct, was charged with assaulting Patrolman MICHAEL BOUGHAN. The case was referred to the Board.

Patrolman JOHN H. STRETCH, of the Twenty-third Precinct, charged with having intoxicated in the Station-house, and in denial of the accusation, told how he had been that day over a large portion of the City and was very tired. It was shown on the other hand, that when first accused he had admitted that he had been drinking, and the case was referred to the Board.

Patrolman THOMAS J. LALOR, Twenty-ninth Precinct, charged Patrolman HENRY FORD, of the same precinct, with striking a prisoner who was in his custody. FORD stated that the prisoner was a desperate character, whom he had first arrested, but he broke away from him, and was then arrested by LALOR. FORD admitted that he had struck the prisoner with his billy, but claimed that he did not hurt him. Judge BOSWORTH, upon these facts, remarked that there are occasions when it is proper to use the club, but its use can never be justified upon a prisoner who is making no resistance.

At a subsequent meeting of the Board, STRETCH was dismissed, and the same decision was rendered in the case of JAMES QUIGLEY, Twenty-seventh Precinct, and CLEVELAND A. CONNOR, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct.

The Greek Minister Not Promoted.

It appears that there is not the slightest foundation for the report which has recently been so generally circulated that M. CLEON RANGABE, the Chargé d'Affaires for Greece at Washington, has been accredited to the Greek Embassy at Paris as its chief. M. RANGABE is quite a young man, being only twenty-nine years of age, and though a prominent diplomatist, a good authority states that he has not had that experience in foreign diplomacy which would justify his elevation to the first grade in the Corps Diplomatique, that of Ambassador. It may be possible that the distinguished father of the young Greek Chargé d'Affaires, who once so ably represented his country at the seat of government of the United States, has received the mission to France, though no official notification of such appointment has been made either at the office of the Greek Consulate-General at this port or at the Legation at Washington. M. RANGABE'S visit to Europe is purely one of recreation, and has no political significance whatever. It is expected that he will make an extended tour upon the Continent during the Summer, accompanied by his wife, the accomplished daughter of Baron VON GEROLT, and return to his post at Washington late in the Fall.

The Anti-Income Tax Association.

A motion was made yesterday by Mr. MIRON WINSLOW, attorney for the Anti-Income TAX ASSOCIATION, before Judge GILBERT, at Special Term of the Supreme Court, in the City of Brooklyn, for an injunction to restrain JAMES FREELAND, Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District, including Kings, Queens, Suffolk and Richmond Counties, from collecting the income TAX, and an order was granted for the Collector to show cause why a permanent injunction should not be granted against him. A similar injunction will soon be applied for before one of the Judges of the Supreme Court in this county.

An "Influential" Officer in Trouble.

JACOB KING, an officer of the Court of General Sessions, was committed yesterday by Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs Police Court, for obtaining money by trick and device. It appeared that AUGUST ALEXANDER, of No. 139 Washington-street, having been committed to the Tombs for intoxication, was visited by KING, who offered to get him out for $10, and was paid the money. He endeavored to fulfill his bargain by applying to Justice HOGAN for the release of the prisoner, but the Magistrate refused to grant the request. KING then tried to induce other persons supposed to have "influence" to intercede for ALEXANDER, but without success, and that unfortunate finally regained his liberty only by his bar-keeper's paying his fine of $10. When coming out of the Tombs he met KING, and demanded the return of his money, which that public servant promised but neglected to do. The outcries of ALEXANDER against the Tombs officials as a set of thieves reaching the ears of Justice HOGAN, caused the investigation, which ended in the arrest of KING and his committment without bail for examination.

THE SICK HORSES.

Condition of the Disease at the Various Stables Yesterday—The Malady Probably on the Decline.

The horse plague in the City still continues, but seems to be on the decrease. No new cases have occurred at the Second-avenue Railroad Company's stables within the last few days. At the Third-avenue stables a large portion of the building is set aside for a hospital. Yesterday two horses dead of the disease laid in the court-yard, and two were suspended in slings, while three others laid on the straw. About 190 horses were in the stables reserved for bad cases, and presented a pitiful spectacle. The doctor in charge told the TIMES reporter that these were composed of a variety of cases, but acknowledged that the majority were affected with the new malady. The opposite stables contain a number of convalescing, which added to large numbers sent to Baker's Jail, and makes a terrible array of diseased horses belonging to this road. About eight new cases have been added to the number reported and two have died. This is the statement of the stable authorities.

No fresh cases are reported at the Sixth-avenue Railroad stables on the Belt line, or on any of the various railroads where the disease has appeared, and which have been enumerated in the TIMES. The disease among the horses on the Twenty-third-street line of stages, is reported by the officials to have killed, and the stock is recovering. The disease has made great ravages among the stock of the Fifth-avenue line of stages, but as the officials seem desirous to hold no communication with reporters, it is impossible to arrive at any accurate estimate of its extent. A TIMES reporter was informed that fourteen stages had been taken off the route during the past week for want of horses, and that about eighty animals had been sick.

A gentleman who has been much interested in the progress of the disease, and who is a man of experience among horses, furnished to the reporter the following interesting statement of the origin of the disease, which is given as his theory: "The disease is not, as was at first supposed, a malady of recent origin, but has long been known in Algiers and other parts of northern Africa, where the horses have from time to time suffered severely from its effects. The Bedouins term it Borasz, and attribute it to an inflammation of the bowels, caused by the inhalation of the dust from the leaves. They feed their horses made at different times frightful inroads among the cavalry of the French Army stationed in Africa. The French designated it as an inflammation of the stomach, and call it paraphlegis. Their treatment is an injection of turpentine and sulphate of zinc, with boluses of tar-balls administered at short intervals, which are said to be very successful.

The peculiar character of this disease has of course awakened the curiosity of scientific men, and a consultation of eminent Veterinary surgeons will be shortly held, when the much vexed questions may be finally settled. Dr. ERICH, of the College of Veterinary Surgeons, the oldest veterinary practitioner in the City, a contemporary of Abernethy, from whom as well as Sir CHARLES BELL and Sir BENJAMIN BRODIE, he has received certificates, gives as his opinion, without having made any diagnosis or having seen a single case, that the disease is endemic. He thinks that the blood is impure and unfit for the nutrition of the body, and consequently vitality is lowered.

Belladonna and aconite, he says, are depressing agents. The disease is plainly of a depressed character. Paraphimosis is introduced by a relaxed state of the muscles. Any lesion of the spinal cord will reduce sensation and motion. This produces the paralysis.

The Approaching Sangerfest.

The only Anglo-American vocal organization which is to participate in the Sangerfest next week in the Washington Choral Union. The society will also take part in the public singing, and the members are confident that they will secure a prize. In order to be thoroughly trained for the contest the society is engaged in daily rehearsals. Leave of absence for one week has been furnished by the Department chiefs of the United States Government to those subordinates who are members of the society.

The grand Fest procession on Wednesday of next week will not pass the City Hall, but will be reviewed by the Mayor and City authorities next week. On Wednesday Mr. PAUR, the Bundes Dirigent, will go to Philadelphia to rehearse the vocalists of that city, who, it is stated, are rather lacking in training for the Fest choruses.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

JOHN TALBOTT and WILLIAM COLLINS were brought before United States Commissioner SHIELDS, yesterday, at the instance of MICHAEL DEMPSEY, a Custom-house Inspector, charged with receiving a quantity of cigars from the steamer Morro Castle. The prisoners, who were detected in the offense, threw the articles into the river and assaulted the officers for endeavoring to recover them. They were held to answer.

On a vacant lot at Sixty-second-street and Fourth-avenue on Thursday last, a poor old worn-out horse was hobbling about. One foot had completely rotted off. The animal had evidently been turned out to die of starvation. From Thursday until Saturday the horse was noticed by persons residing near by, and during that time no one had the humanity to give the poor beast even a pail of water. On Saturday a telegram was received at the office of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Society from the Police Station regarding the matter. The Police officers on the beat had taken three days to determine what was to be done. The animal was killed and hauled cobble-stones and dirt the horse had had no food whatever. The poor beast was eventually killed.

Yesterday stage No. 280 of the Fifth-avenue line, belonging to S. W. & S. M. ANDREWS & MCDONALD, was stopped going down-town by one of Mr. BERGH'S men, at the corner of Fourth-street and Broadway. One of the horses had been blistered on both sides of his body, and the flesh was all raw. Every movement of the traces chafed the wounds. The stage had seventeen passengers inside, all of whom were horrified at the sickening sight, and wondered how the owners could allow a horse in such a state to leave the stable.
